SAYS NEW ERA DAWNS IN CHILD HEALTH WORK

A new era in child health work is opening at the present time, according to statement made by Courtenay Dinwiddie, director of demonstrations for the commonwealth fund, under which the Marion County Child Health demonstration has been established.

"We have been thinking of the child in sections," declared Dinwiddie, "but we are now beginning to realize that he must be thought of as a whole. The child is a more finely geared piece of machinery than anything we have ever developed in the mechanical field."

He compared former sporadic health efforts, which centered attention on one particular phase or another of health work, to mechanical work on an engine which considers only the gasoline, or only the water, or any other one phase of mechanics.

He stressed the idea of keeping the child healthy, rather than waiting for it to become sick and then trying to cure it.

Mr. Dinwiddie will remain in Salem and Marion county for the remainder of the present week, getting acquainted with the situation here.

Dr. Walter H. Brown, head of the local demonstration, spoke briefly following Dinwiddie's speech, describing the response to the demonstration in Marion county as "one of the most amazing experiences that I have had in a rather long and checkered career." Usually a response of 50 per cent, that proportion signifying their willingness to be examined, is considered good, he stated, but in Salem and Marion county the response has amounted to 95 per cent. Where less than 20 per cent of the parents are usually interested enough to accompany their children to the demonstrations, the proportion here has been 77 per cent, he stated.

"It means," said Dr. Brown, "that the people here are intelligent and farseeing, and that they have this spirit of the west which we have heard of."

Dr. E. E. Fisher of Salem acted as chairman. Previous to Dinwiddie's speech Dr. Brown introduced the members of his staff, who were guests at the luncheon.

ate room where his father couldn't hear the questions they asked. The boy, in tears, answered the questions the best he could.

It was 6 o'clock when Willett was arrested. It was 10:30 p. m. when the officers finally decided that he wasn't a crook. Willett and his son had been driving nearly all day. They had had no supper, and it was a pretty tiresome four and a half hours they put in at the police station. Willett wanted to go to a hotel, suggesting that his room could be watched to see that he didn't escape. But this proposition was refused him.

He gave the names of two well known Salem men with whom he was acquainted, both of them in the fruit business. But neither was at home, and the policeman would not take Willett's word for it, so he had to wait until they did get home. Then he was identified to the satisfaction of the Salem police.

Willett was driving a car that belongs to the organization that has employed him in Yakima for several years. He could not register the car after entering Oregon yesterday and this was held against him at the station. He did not have a Washington driver's license and this also contributed to the suspicion against him.

Willett and his son had started south to Medford and possibly to San Francisco on a vacation trip. Now he says he is disgusted with long distance driving and will probably go to Seaside and back to Yakima.

While Willett was waiting at the police station the officer in charge sent a telegram to the Yakima police for information. No reply came, but the cost of the telegram was assessed against Willett. Today he was required to get a driver's license and allowed to go on his way.
