BRYAN'S PUBLIC CAREER MOST PICTURESQUE

dress at Madison Square Garden, New York, propounded his theories on government ownership.

William Howard Taft defeated Bryan in his third try for the presidency in 1908. From that period Bryan's influence on democracy was waning. While powerful in the 1912 convention which nominated Woodrow Wilson for the first time, his influence was felt less and less as the years passed.

Leadership Broken

Mr. Bryan's leadership of the democratic party definitely was broken at the national convention at San Francisco in 1920, when he was defeated in his efforts to have a dry plank included in the platform. Throughout the campaign he remained silent and afterward said it was the first time in 40 years that he had made no speeches for a democratic presidential candidate. The reason for his action, he said, was that he did not agree with James M. Cox, the party's candidate who was defeated by Warren G. Harding, and that he did not want to debate with the candidate of his own party.

After his defeat on the convention floor relative to the proposed dry plank Mr. Bryan said: "My heart is in the grave with our cause. I must pause until it comes back to me."

Soon after the election of President Harding, Mr. Bryan suggested that President Wilson resign because the people had voted against the league of nations, one of the dominant issues of the campaign, and in favor of an association of nations as proposed by Mr. Harding. The former secretary of state proposed that President Wilson immediately turn over the office to Vice President Marshall with the understanding that the latter appoint Mr. Harding as secretary of state at the beginning of the congress and then resign so that Mr. Harding immediately could become president and put in effect his association of nations.

Supports McAdoo

Having become a permanent legal resident of Miami, Fla., Mr. Bryan was elected from that state a delegate to the democratic national convention at New York in 1924. He took a prominent part in the proceedings, but his influence was greatly curtailed as compared with that which he exerted at previous national conventions of the party. His advocacy of the nomination of William G. McAdoo had no effect in breaking the dead lock which continued for nearly two weeks between Mr. McAdoo and Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York, the contest eventually being ended when the delegates switched to John W. Davis, who was nominated.

Mr Bryan was a member of the resolutions committee and at one of the sessions when the K. K. K. issue was being discussed he dropped to his knees and urged the other members of the committee to join with him in prayer that they might be guided in the right light. The former secretary took part in the campaign, but was not as active as he had been in some previous ones. His brother, Charles W. Bryan, then governor of Nebraska, was the democratic nominee for vice-president.

Easing up on his political activities with the 1920 national campaign, Mr. Bryan took a greater interest in the affairs of the Presbyterian church and devoted more of his time to lecturing. In 1923 and 1925 he was defeated for moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church after an exciting contest. He was elected vice moderator at the general assembly in 1924.

An avowed opponent of the Darwin theory of evolution, Mr. Bryan made many addresses on the subject. His latest public action was leading the prosecution of John T. Scopes at Dayton for violation of the Tennessee anti-evolution teaching law.

Bryan was born at Salem, Ill., March 19, 1860. He was graduated with honors at the Union College of Law, at Chicago, in 1883, and the following year married Miss Mary Baird. He went to Lincoln, Neb., in 1888 and immediately became active in democratic politics of the state.

Bryan began a two term service in congress in 1890. In 1892 and 1894 he was nominated by the democratic party for senator in Nebraska but was defeated in the legislature.
