The Trappers

Some district attorneys of Oregon, with more zeal than judgment, seem to think that it is their province to become agents provocateur as well as snoopers and when the community seems law abiding, to stimulate crime.

In Jackson county the district attorney established a candy store along the Crater highway as a blind and opened negotiations to secure a supply of moonshine. Through persuasion and cash he induced a number of persons to violate the law and then pinched them.

In Tillamook county last week, the district attorney, at county expense, fixed up an elaborate movie picture studio, advertised the coming of a group of film stars and induced several persons to deliver a supply of booze and threw them in the hoose-gow.

The federal and state courts are on record concerning the inciting of persons to crime by trapping. In United States versus Echols, Federal Reports, Vol. 253, page 662, the court ruled:

A defendant cannot be convicted of a crime which he was incited and induced to commit by a Government officer for his entrapment.

In Petersburg versus United States, Federal Reports, Vol. 255, page 433, the court ruled:

Where officers of the law have incited a person to commit the crime charged, and lured him on with the purpose of arresting him in its commission, the law will not authorize a verdict of guilty.

In People versus Everts, 112 Michigan, page 195, the court ruled:

Under our laws, a person who induces another to commit a crime with knowledge that the same is about to be committed under such inducements as are held out by the person inducing the same, if the same would not have been committed except at the instigation and approval of such person, then the jury should look upon the person who admits that he caused the offense to be committed with disfavor.

Human nature is weak enough without sworn administrators of justice plotting to induce the violation of law by becoming stool-pigeons. That is why the court rulings uphold natural sentiment against the trappers. That is why, before Volsteadism, the inducer to crime was held equally guilty with the perpetrator.

Allopaths Advertise

The doctors of Texas have decided to break their ancient precedent and overcome their life-long prejudice and advertise. The State Medical Association at its recent convention at Austin authorized the abandonment of the old code of ethics, naming a committee to devise dignified, yet effective means of advertising, which would mark the allopaths from the different kinds of practitioners whom they do not consider qualified to treat disease.

This committee was instructed to recommend to the county associations that they publish the names of their members in some local paper or papers at regular intervals. The frequency of these intervals was left to each county organization to determine. County associations were also to be urged that at frequent intervals they have some material of an educational nature concerning common diseases submitted to the local papers for publication for the public good.

The Dallas County Medical Association is planning a $25,000 advertising campaign. It expects to insert half-page advertisements in each of the four dailies of the city successively, repeating the program each week. A part of the space each time will be devoted to educational matter and the remainder given over to a roster of the Dallas doctors who are members of the association.

There never was a more foolish idea than that professional men should not advertise. Failure to utilize this avenue has left the field to fakers, quacks and frauds, who are enabled thereby to prey on the public for their own enrichment and the physician's loss. The man with a six months course of instruction takes the business away from the man with the six years plus course—through advertising with a consequent impairment of the public health.

Eventually there will not only be association advertising on the part of the doctors, but group advertising as well and probably of specialists, for in neglecting advertising physicians are simply cutting their income and putting money in the pockets of imposters.

One Wife on Approval

PLAYING WITH FIRE

Cynthia and Noel Gardner made their way slowly up a slight rise of ground near the cabin; then, as they came to a sudden stop, they saw a great, dark, hard, round, glowing object, which they saw to be a meteorite, and they were so struck by its beauty that they forgot to be afraid.

It was a night of warm sun; the moonlight was so bright that an air of unreality lay over everything. Cynthia, as she went shining down a long, easy hill, felt as if she were flying through the wind-like air.

"Oh, isn't this perfect?" she cried to Noel, when they had reached the bottom and started up the next hill. "I've never known anything like it."

"Neither have I," he replied, and his deep voice made the words doubly significant, as she knew he had meant them to be. Hurriedly she tried to find a safer subject. She did not want Noel to renew his love-making.

"It's so beautiful here; these pine woods are magnificent," she exclaimed. "I've often been in Canada for the winter sports, but never have I known anything more wonderful than this."

Determinedly she planned the conversation to a discussion of the scenery, as they climbed the hill. When they had reached the top and paused a moment for breath he touched her arm lightly. "Look—don't that incredible level?" he inquired, with a gaze toward the moonlit world that lay below them. She knew that there were other colors in the vicinity of Cecilia, but from that hill they could see no sign of human life; only the woods, with their beautiful overtones, as heavy with snow that some of them were like white tents and the long, unbroken sweep of snow that marked the long hill. "I feel as if we could sail straight down this hill into Heaven."

Physician Surprised

"Hearing of some good results from the use of May's Wonderful Remedy I decided to try it on a chronic case of indigestion and gastritis I was interested in. After the first dose the patient was relieved of gas trouble and was soon able to eat radishes and many things he had not eaten in years." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract, and allays the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. One dose will convince or money refunded. J. C. Perry's, D. J. Fry's and druggists everywhere. —Adv.

on," he said slowly. "I'd like to do that—come a trapper at the end, and wind up my life right there; knowing that I'm with you is the only thing that means anything to me, Cynthia, and since you can't see your way clear to being with me always, I don't care about going on."

"Oh, Noel—don't!" she cried. "Surely I can't mean that much to you."

"But go on. Every other woman I've ever known has disappointed me bitterly. You're different from them all. I know that I can trust you as if I could a man—and I worship you as if you were a goddess."

"I'm not, though—I'm just a woman," exclaimed Cynthia, taking refuge in flippancy. She felt that she could not trust herself. Noel had never appealed to her so strongly before as he had in that moment. She did not know how much was due to the magic of the night and how much to her feeling for him, but she was resolved not to find out. She did not want to give for Noel.

Turning abruptly, she started down the hill. It was very steep, and here and there slight bumps, rocks showed where tree stumps or small bushes were concealed by the snow. Trees grew in scattered clumps on the incline, and at the bottom was a thickly wooded area, through which no path was visible. "Butter take it easy," Noel called, as she went dashing down the hill like this.

"You can't be too sure of a hill like this," she called back, balancing perfectly, so well poised that she was hardly conscious of helping herself with the pole that she held lightly. On, on, so fast that she seemed to be sailing thru the moonlit air instead of on the ground.

She could not help wishing that she could go on like that forever; she felt as if she were flying thru a dream world. Noel was some- where behind her. She hardly realized that he was there.

Faster and faster she went as the hill became steeper. She was coming into the wooded space below. Perhaps it would be better to slow down a bit, she told herself, returning to reality, as when she was going at such a rate it was a bit hard to steer sometimes. And the trees had such a way of bobbing up just when she didn't expect them.

LOVE LETTERS FROM ZIELINSKI SIZZLE WITH ENDEARMENTS

plighted their troth for better or for worse. The Leo referred to in the letters is his brother and the Eva is her sister.

The letter of April 14, is as follows:

Salem, Ore:

My dearest Helen: 'Tis the thirteenth of the month dear but I feel I must let you know some how since am afraid to phone. Am sorry, very sorry I must disappoint myself. 'Twill be impossible for me to see you Sunday, March 16 as my sis has been very sick and I a brother must visit her.

How is Eva? Helen first. Ha. Ha. Am trying to imagine you as here beside me now dearie, do you ever think of me? and how were you Monday?

Am having the flower vase fixed, Wright and me tell me you still love me sweetie, Am dreadfully sleepy dear, so good night, Snack!

Morning—smack again, my first thought this morning was of you dear.

Again I must say am sorry can't see you Sunday, but lets hope for the next Sunday will be full of love again, like this, My darling my own darling, how much I love you and can a life of devotion ever show you how much I appreciate the happiness you have given me and the pride I feel in your having trusted you sweet self to me. God help me to keep that trust perfect in the highest way.

Now all I can do is chew my own gum and live to wait patiently for another week.

be good darling, I think of you often, Sweet little x's and a flat car full of little squeezes.

Yours passionately,

THE VAMP.

The other letter was written at an earlier day in their relationship and was of interest at the trial as indicating the period of time over which their amatory inclinations had extended.

That letter follows: Salem, Oregon Jan. 24, 1924.

Dear Helen:

How is everything? Are you in good humor. You had better be.

Helen I have a dreadful dose of poison oak so can not come Friday evening as I had promised. Have it in my hair too. This means Leo is thinking of Eva.

My eyes look like two fried eggs. This wringing puts me in mind of an old hen intoxicated being pulled backwards.

Leo says misjudged her capacity. Now have a real heart once an don't say you want love me for having to disappoint myself as well.

Answer again as you write such love letters just the kind we would expect from a sweet little girl like you.

Aurevoir but not good bye. POISON OAK & CO. Attorneys for the two sides in the case have held conferences as to what steps shall be taken toward effecting a settlement under the statute as to the amount to be paid annually for the support of the child—now the central figure in the case. Indications are now that a stipulation on that point will be reached and supplemental proceedings to fix the amount will not be required.

Society

WOMAN NEARLY INSANE

"I was nervous, could not sleep, melancholy and nearly insane at times," writes Mrs. T. A. Saunders of 711 E. Depot St., Knoxville, Tenn. "After being in this condition nearly three years I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised and took it. It made me a well woman. I gained 22 lbs. in weight and haven't had a bit of trouble since. I hope it will do as much for other women as it has for me." Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the one dependable remedy for female ills.—Adv.
