CHEAP ELECTRICITY
—a great achievement

THE CHANCES are you have not visited your electric light and power company. You may not even know where it is.

But a great achievement has been going on inside its walls. Old machinery has been taken out, new machinery installed. In years when the cost of most commodities has risen, the cost of electricity has been kept down. It is lower now than before the war.

This means lower manufacturing costs for your industries and better light for your homes.

It means that the routine tasks of home life can be done by inexpensive little motors.

It means conservation of the nation's coal supply.

To an industry in which such achievements are possible, the General Electric Company has made many contributions. It has built new and improved machinery for the electric light and power companies; and in its research laboratories it has developed better lamps, and other devices by which electricity is efficiently used.

And day by day, progress continues. There are still millions of homes without electricity; still many tasks being done in factories and homes by human hands which electric motors ought to do.

By cooperation on the part of all—manufacturer, public utility company, and public—this improvement will go on.
