The state board of control yesterday forwarded to various banks the state notes executed by farmers in favor of the state to secure loans under the farmers' relief bill of the 1925 legislature. The notes were accompanied by mortgage releases. Most of them are in central and eastern Oregon. The aggregate of loans in areas where most damaged wheat to the extent that reseedling was necessary is about $400,000.

Little doubt exists with authorities at the state penitentiary that George Holmes, who was shot and killed in a fight at North Bend, is the same George Holmes who was paroled from the state penitentiary here February 14 last. The dead man is said to have been from Longview, Wash., and when Holmes left the prison he said he was going to Longview where he had a position. In one letter to the parole officer he said that he was married. The description of the dead man tallies with that of the former convict. Holmes was sent to the prison from Multnomah county to serve two years for forgery.

SENTIMENT FOR HEAD IN AUTO PARKING GROWS

Sentiment in favor of head-in-parking of automobiles has been growing in Salem during the last week, according to information from authoritative sources, and apparently there is no doubt that a large majority of the people are for that method rather than the cumbersome method of backing in that is now in use in the city.

A police officer today pointed out that head-in parking would have a tendency to cut down the number of traffic accidents. He declared that under the present system motorists driving away from the curb almost invariably drive directly across the street, which is one of the most dangerous practices connected with the backing-in method. If on the other hand the motorist were backing away from the curb he would naturally not cross the street, but would drive to the intersection before making a turn.

Allerman Paul Johnson has made some investigation of the last few weeks by writing letters to officials of other cities. The replies indicate that head-in parking is preferred as compared with backing in. More cities heard from use the head-in method than the backing-in system and pronounce it satisfactory.
