HOME COMFORTS REFLECTED HERE

"Be it ever so humble, There's no place like home."

You cannot translate it into terms of money, for the meanest hut may breathe more the true spirit of home than the richest palace, but when you talk to a hard-headed business man about such tangible things as "love" and "patriotism" you have to "show him." Mere words do not go very far when it comes to a matter of separating him from his money, yet no man who maintains a home and does not neglect those in it need hesitate about approaching such a business man for an extension of credit in case of necessity.

Where there is a large percentage of home-owners, as here, the community spirit is as strong as the combined "home" spirit of its respective citizens. The pride they take in their homes is only a part of the pride they take in their city. When lawns are neatly kept and houses well painted, there you will find good streets, corner lights, fire protection and honest officials. The presence of women and children spells schools and churches, libraries and a clean civic life. The man who owns his home is the best booster a town can have—he is never sick of his bargain, and he is a living argument why a man should lose no time in acquiring a home of his own.

The men who own their homes are the backbone of a community. They must own them, because the business of renting habitations to others, which has been largely developed in big cities, has happily not spread to communities the size of ours. The home-owning citizen is the bulwark of the nation.

The home-owner and the home merchant are the hope of Salem. As long as both remain with us, Salem will continue to prosper. The one will assure it of a sound social and civic existence, while the other will assure it of the financial soundness, which will keep the business active and attract to its bounds new enterprises. These two are interdependent.

Women do not knit socks, neither do they bake bread any more. Why? Because it is not economy to do these things. For the same reason many women send the washing to some good laundry at 20 lbs. for 75c.
