Sam Butler, deputy sheriff in the tax department, has just closed up a few little tax matters that have been hanging fire through many years. For a long period some money has been lying in the vault in the sheriff's office to pay on taxes due way back in 1904. Poll tax was paid in those years. The taxpayers had paid their poll tax, but had not received receipts. They sent in the other money to cover the balance. For some reason the matter hung fire until a few days ago Butler decided to clear it up. In the court house garret he pulled out stacks of old tax books, found the record and straightened out the difficulty. He did the same thing with another tax matter dating back to 1908.

SIX PRISON EMPLOYEES WALK PLANK

conversation and gossiping with the convicts, your inattention to duty and general disloyalty to the institution that has a right to expect your best efforts, have made your presence more of a menace than a protection. You are dismissed."

Denying flatly that he has been guilty of unnecessary conversation with the convicts, that he has gossiped with them, or that he has not been performing his duty, Murphy said:

"If the fact that I told the coroner's jury the facts that they asked for and gave them information which I felt was for the protection of the public and the betterment of conditions at the prison constitutes disloyalty, then I am disloyal—disloyal because I refused to perjure myself to protect the warden."

Dismissal a Surprise

Prison guards, wardens and deputy wardens with whom Murphy has served in the past all assert that he was a capable and efficient guard.

The dismissal of Guard Gardner came as a complete surprise both to the public and to other employees at the prison. Warden Dalrymple had frequently spoken highly of Gardner, and during both of the last two manhunts occasioned by the break of Murray and Kelley and their accomplices Gardner was detailed by the warden to follow every hot clue that developed, being allowed a free hand in his search for the fugitives.

"Gardner is one of the best men that I have, and I have every confidence in him and his judgment," Dalrymple told newspapermen on at least two occasions during the last manhunt, when the guard stayed in the field day and night almost without sleep.

Unwilling Witness

Gardner was an unwilling witness before the coroner's jury, and except to state that "so long as the reform element controls the running of the prison there will be no discipline, and it will be a haven of rest and a paradise for the convicts," he had little criticism to offer of the administration of the institution.

Heretofore it has been the practice of Warden Dalyrymple in discharging employees who have been at the prison for any length of time to credit and pay them for the two weeks' vacation period due them, but this was denied Murphy, whose annual vacation would have started today.

The dismissal of these two men leaves the prison practically without guards of any experience, and brings the list of those who have quit or been discharged up to six. The others are:

List of Discharged

Guard Henry L. Foust, who sought to get the shotgun with which Warden Dalyrymple, hiding behind an oil barrel, was armed and take up the pursuit of the fleeing convicts, but was told by the warden to stay out of sight or he might get shot. Foust resigned the morning following the break.

Guard Ira Hubbard, who stood on tower No. 7 at the time of the break.

Clair A. Baker, wall guard who resigned the morning after he had told the coroner's jury that there was no discipline at the prison and that the convicts run the institution.

James Nesmith, turnkey whom the convicts knocked down with a cuspidor in breaking into the prison arsenal, and who was discharged by Dalrymple.

With the exception of Foust, who was a war veteran, all of these guards were experienced prison employees.

Murphy and Gardner are young and active men, and were rated as among the best rifle and pistol shots among the guards.

Each of the entrants was given an award of some kind.

The management at Woodland park has arranged for special stunts for Sunday and Labor Day. On Sunday a five dollar award will be given to the girl, attired in man's clothes, who can give the best imitation of a man, and the same prize to the man who gives the best imitation of a girl. A "hunt the letter" stunt is planned for Labor day.

NOT GUILTY PLEAS MADE BY CONVICTS

ty." Previously, the court asked him if he had obtained an attorney.

"Yes, sir," answered Murray. "Will R. King of Portland."

All Plead Not Guilty.

Murray was returned to the penitentiary before Kelley and Willos were brought from that place to the court house. Each was arraigned alone, and each consulted Attorney King before answering "not guilty" to the court's request for plea. None of the convicts showed nervousness. About 20 minutes after the pleas were entered the three were brought into court for the purpose of fixing the trial date.

While each was taken into the court house in irons, no handcuffs were in evidence in the court chamber. In this there was an interesting co-incidence. When Attorney King, who is to represent the three convicts in their trials for life, was a member of the state supreme court in 1908 he wrote the opinion in the murder case of the state against Dorris in which the high court reversed the lower court for Wallowa county on grounds that the defendant appeared before the jury in handcuffs. Judge King himself could not remember whether he wrote the opinion, but reference to the records of the supreme court showed that he did.

Wanted It Later.

It was said to be the desire of Judge King today that the trial be not set before November 1, but he offered no objection to the date fixed by Judge Kelly.

Murray, Kelley and Willos escaped from the state prison on August 12 after killing Guards Sweeney and Holman, and after a fourth member of their gang, Bert (Oregon) Jones, had been killed by a guard. After a man-hunt of nearly two weeks Murray was caught at Centralia, Wash., after he had been turned in by Philip Carson, whom Murray had met on a freight train and with whom he planned a holdup near Centralia. Willos and Kelley were caught by a Portland posse two days later near Goldendale, Wash.

GAS SHORTAGE FORCES PLANE DOWN AT HILO

of the trans-Pacific fliers, probably will take off for Honolulu tomorrow.

Carrying 24,000 pounds, the same amount it will lift when it sails over the Pacific, the mammoth plane made a successful flight today with Rear Admiral William Moffatt, chief of the navy bureau of aeronautics as a passenger.

Naval headquarters announced that PB-1 probably would begin her flight for Hawaii from the waters of the Golden Gate off Crissy field, instead of from San Pablo bay from which the other planes departed.

Averages 82 Miles

San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 1—(AP)—The navy seaplane PN-9 number 1, attempting a non-stop flight from San Francisco to Hawaii had completed half of its journey of 2100 nautical miles between five and six o'clock this morning.

To that time the plane had made an average speed of approximately 71 nautical miles an hour, the equivalent of a fraction less than 82 land miles an hour. In the early hours of today it was exceeding the speed it had maintained earlier in its flight and was making up the time it had been behind its schedule.

GRAND THEATER WILL BE HEILIG WHEN FINISHED

rangement will be changed through out. A ladies' rest room will be built in the basement, and a running incline will extend from the the basement into the east end of the foyer.

"One of the biggest changes to be effected will be the doing away with the two center posts, that people have been dodging for the last 25 years," says Archie Holt, who has been made resident manager of the theater.

The lighting effect on the outside of the building, when completed, will be very similar to that of the Journal building in Portland, according to Mr. Holt. The large electric sign, which is being made by a local firm, will be placed at the corner of the building and be visible from both Court and High streets. The lobby will be enlarged by tearing out the office from which tickets are now sold. The space south of the lobby which, when finished, will front toward High street, will be rented to a local real estate firm.

Seating arrangement on the inside includes making loge seats of the last three rows on the lower floor, and the first row in the balcony. Workmen had already begun to put the first new coat of kalsomine on the ceiling of the theater this morning.

"When the people here walk into this house the first night they won't recognize it," says Mr. Holt. "They'll think they're walking into a brand new theater."

Archie Holt is a former resident of Salem, having left here in the spring of 1923, and had charge of theaters in Klamath Falls and Seattle.

The Association Vaudeville, formerly known as the Junior Orpheum circuit will play at the theater here every Friday, giving one matinee and two evening performances. The balance of the week will be given over to moving picture shows. The new moving picture machines are being shipped to Salem from the east by express for installation here.

A large, modern organ will be installed.

A road show will be presented occasionally, Holt saying this morning that he has already booked all the available shows that will be passing through Salem for as far ahead as next June.
