BLAME FOR DISASTERS IN AIR ON ARMY AND NAVY

 Three airplanes were built to participate in it. These showed nothing novel in design and were untried for this kind of work. One never got away from the Pacific coast and one flew a few miles out and was forced to land in the water and one was lost on account of being out of gas somewhere on the high seas.
 Patrol vessels were stationed every 200 miles, a distance entirely too far apart for an experimental flight of this kind with such primitive flying machines as the PN-9s are. Double or triple this number of vessels should have been there. In fact the whole Pacific fleet should have been employed instead of joy riding around the Antipodes.
 He asked "why, if they expected to run short of fuel as indeed they might, did they not make preparations for refueling the airplane while it was in the air? And why a crew of five was carried when the weight of one or two could be replaced by additional fuel?"
Whyness of Flight
 Commenting on the Shenandoah Colonel Mitchell admitted that he knew but little of the accident but said he believed the airship fifty per cent overweight and may have been strained as a result of her encounter with the storm at Lakehurst several months ago. He paid tribute to the memory of Commander Lansdowne as a "splendid man and the last of our capable and experienced airship captains."
 "The Shenandoah was going west on a propaganda mission for the navy to offset adverse publicity caused by the failure in the Pacific and Arctic and propaganda and not real service was the keynote in these operations."
 Claiming that the air route across the Pacific via Alaska is a short one and that any nation can reach this country by that route, Colonel Mitchell thrust at naval officers who believe that "no nation can reach this one across these oceans."
 Shenandoah's Case
 Bulletin were not available to air. He deplored that the weather men, although issued for the "benefit of onions and cabbage," were charging incompetence in naval officers in aeronautical matters. Colonel Mitchell declared that the Shenandoah had too few helium valves and that administrative economy or mal-administration had been the cause of loss of life on the ill-fated airship.
 Colonel Mitchell spent all of Friday, Friday night and half of a day Saturday preparing the statement. He revised and rewrote it a number of times before releasing it. The statement contains about 6000 words and closes with this paragraph:
 "The bodies of former commandants and bodies of officers who served in America, Asia, Europe and Africa, many, yes, many, sent there directly by official stupidity. We all make mistakes but the error mistakes made by armies and navies whenever they have been allowed to handle aeronautics show their incompetence. We would not be keeping our trust with our departed comrades were we to longer conceal these facts."
 "I owe the government everything. As a patriotic American citizen, I can stand by no longer and see these degrading performances at the expense of the lives of our people and the dishonor of the American Republic."
