A liquor dealer is entitled to issue a license for the sum of two dollars. Schunke stated, which entitles its owner to "buy all the liquor you want for a year." They tried to sell him and Nate Elliott, who was also a delegate to the convention. Schunke said, but they were "too used to being under prohibition that we didn't see any sign of getting a liquor license." Dr. Henry Morris was the third member of the Salem delegation which went to the convention. Tourist trade in Vancouver amounts to $40,000,000 a year, Schunke reported, the tourist attractions there being "no better than those right around Salem."

that unity of command in time of battle, and that uniformity of training in the peace, which every war has proved to be essential to victory.

The secretary accused the board that "all the information in the possession of the navy department or any of its officers, desired by you is at your disposal."

"I wish," he said, "to present the matters involved in the full and fairest manner possible by those best qualified to give the information."

"The mission of an air force of the navy in time of war must necessarily be to assist the navy in carrying out its far mission. Naval aviation is today organized as an integral part of the navy and constitutes an arm thereof, in the same manner as do battleships, cruisers, destroyers, submarines or mine layers.

"Acting as such integral part of the navy, its employment in time of war will fall into the following classes:

"First—As an auxiliary with the other units of the navy; to control of or assist in fire; to reconnoiter or scout for enemy forces; to lay smoke screens; to counter attack enemy air forces seeking to attack our other naval units.

"Second—As combat units to gain control of the air in order that we might employ such control to assist in gaining a decision.

"Third—As combat units, to launch torpedoes or drop bombs upon enemy forces.

"Aviation can best accomplish the above tactical and strategical

LON CHANEY "THE UNHOLY THREE"

Lon Chaney, motion picture actor who appears in "The Unholy Three" at the Hellig theater this week, was the son of deaf and dumb parents, it was stated this morning by Mrs. N. E. Gunnell of this city, who for many years was a next door neighbor to the actor at Colorado Springs, Colo., where Chaney spent his youth. "That accounts for his remarkable facial expression," said Mrs. Gunnell this morning. "He used to talk to his mother by means of a sign language. There were seven children in the Chaney family, four older and two younger than Lon. Lon was about the same age as my boy, 10 years old when we first knew him, which was about 25 years ago. "Maybe you think there didn't used to be a commotion around that place sometimes. Those kids could cut up all they pleased, and their parents couldn't hear a sound they made. Occasionally one of them would get into a scrape or something and come running to his mother to tell her all about it. Lip reading was not well developed in those days, and the children used their fingers only a little in talking. When one of the children had anything to tell his mother he would use mostly his face and arms to express himself. So Lon came naturally by his ability to register numerous expressions. "Without exception all 7 of the children could hear and speak," Mrs. Gunnell says. Their father was employed as an instructor in the mute school at Colorado Springs. Lon first became an actor while in Colorado Springs, taking small parts as an extra in the local opera house. Later he went to Hollywood, and by a chance was picked up by a director in search for a comedian. The director later recommended that he be put into heavier parts, with the result that Chaney eventually became a prominent figure in moving picture circles.

Re-argument ordered in Campbell vs. Eugene, involving validity of ordinance providing for bond issue.

The mission of the naval air force in time of war may then be this stated:

"The air force is an arm of the fleet. Its mission is to aid the surface units in gaining and maintaining command of the sea. It may best carry out this mission by gaining and maintaining control of the air in the theater of naval operations."

"The relations of the air service to the army and navy are officially set forth in the policy of the army and navy relating to air-craft signed by the secretaries of war and of the navy. The policy was issued to the navy as a general order on July 7, 1924.

"Press comment from Great Britain where the pendulum is already swinging back toward naval control for sea-going aviation, recognized the soundness of our air policy."
