3 SURVIVORS TELL STORY

It was impossible to tell whether the men were seriously injured as they were taken from the boat, as they were immediately rushed away to the hospital.

Passengers on the City of Rome said that the night was clear when the collision occurred. The steamer was making from 10 to 12 knots and the submarine, it was thought, was partly submerged and approached the City of Rome diagonally from the starboard side. About half of the passengers were in their staterooms but a number were on deck.

C. H. Tinkham of Medford and Miss Marie Roach of Orlando, N. C., two of the passengers, said that none on board saw the submarine as it approached, but expressed the opinion that the look-out must have noticed it just before the crash. A few persons noticed a red light just before the steamer struck.

Whistle Sounded.

The first indication of danger came with three blasts of the ship's whistle, followed by a series of short tocs. Then came the crash as the vessels struck. The City of Rome, Tinkham said, keeled over slightly as if it had run upon some obstruction.

The searchlight of the City of Rome was out of commission, the witnesses said, but flares were thrown up immediately and a life boat was launched. Those on deck heard cries for help but there no sign of the submarine which must have gone down immediately.

Naval guards surrounded the survivors to ward off the curious as they were led to ambulances and driven to the Chelsea naval hospital.

Captain John H. Diehl, commander of the City of Rome, who gave only meager information concerning the wreck in wireless messages, gave the following statement to newspapermen when the steamer docked:

Captain Tells Story

"At 10:24 p. m., we sighted the submarine on our starboard bow, lower in. I immediately cut my speed and then reverse engines. The submarine, however, continued full speed and a second later we collided, hitting her about half way between stem and conning tower. She sank within a minute. We threw overboard ring buoys and had a boat down in six or seven minutes. Our searchlight failed after a moment, evidently burned out.

"The three men we rescued were all we sighted. I learned from them that they were near an open hatch. Lira, who was the last of the three out, got caught in the antennae as the submarine went down but freed himself in time."

Captain Diehl said the crash came so quickly he did not have time to observe all the details.

Save Only One Light

He said he saw only one light on the submarine, a white one, and he could not tell on what part of the vessel it was mounted. The minute he saw the light the City of Rome's whistle was sounded but it was too late to warn the submarine commander.

Lira asserted that the command er of the submarine, Lieutenant Rodney H. Dodson was one of those carried out of the conning tower at the moment of the crash, but he was not on watch in the conning tower at the time should also have been thrown into the water he said. Lira said on arrival here that the others may have been thrown clear of the sinking submarine probably were dragged under water by the suction and drowned.

A third year Harvard medical student, Frank Esley, of Dallas, Tex., cared for the survivors when they were brought half dead on board the City of Rome. He said that two of the men, Kirle and Lira were half strangled and that their hearts were beating but faintly. The third man, Geater had sustained a bad cut over the eye.

CHET BALL GETS HEAVY SENTENCE

Portland, Or., Sept. 25.—C. L. Ball, local automobile salesman, mixed whisky and gasoline Saturday with the following results: six months in jail, loss of driver's license for a year and one broken arm.

Ball, his injured arm in a sling, appeared before Municipal Judge Elwell yesterday to answer charges. There was little doubt of his guilt. Policeman Ramsey, who arrested him, said he attempted to weave his erratic way through heavy downtown traffic at Broadway and Morrison streets, (testified that he was intoxicated.

A victim appeared in the role of the law. He charged that his "wifec", through rough handling, had broken his arm. Judge Elwell summoned Jailer O'Brien before him and learned that Ball had been offensive and abusive; that he had resisted the efforts of the jailer and his assistants to put him in the drunkard's tank, and that it was necessary to use force to get the man behind the bars.

Ball, on questioning, admitted his arm had been broken about two months before and that the injury he received resulted in a fracture of the break.

The placing of these two huge girders required the construction of a special hoisting log built of 12x12 timbers and rising to a height of 45 feet.

Seats for approximately 700 people will be provided in the main auditorium, the ceiling of which will hang 47 feet above the floor. Here the Gothic style will also be featured, with a heavy

English Gothic arch, at the stage opening flanked by heavy cloistered columns at either side. The arch will be 33 feet wide and 26 feet high at its crest. Five-foot aisles and other roomy features will be embodied in the auditorium, which will be equipped with the latest in heating and ventilating systems.

No set has been even tentatively made for the opening of the new house, according to Mr. Guthrie, but it is hoped to have the roof on by the latter part of October. The forms are now up to and ready to receive the concrete on the second floor elevation, and with favorable weather this elevation will be poured the first of the week. The shaping and pouring of the balconies, which are to be of solid concrete including the floors, will retard the progress of construction somewhat it is expected, but it is hoped to reach the top elevation on the facade, 65 feet above the street, in about three weeks.
