Penny varieties of dahlias were judged yesterday, awards going to Gill Brothers Seed company, Portland, first; Miss Vera L. Tucker of Gresham, second; Mrs. George Crites, Newberg, third.

Out on the state fair grounds this week is an aggregation of livestock which, if owned by one man, would put him on easy street for the rest of his life and the lives of his children. In the Guernsey herd in showing, for instance, the wonderful herd, owned by the Grangeville Guernsey Farm of Grangeville, Idaho, the animals arriving in Salem yesterday afternoon. The owner of this herd is a wealthy lumberman of Seattle. It was formerly known as the Dupue herd of California. It was by odds, at that time, the most noted Guernsey herd in California.

In this herd is the great bull, May Rose Cherub, for which Dupue paid $10,000. When judged last week at Washington's southwestern fair at Puyallup, the eastern judge in passing on this animal said that it was his opinion that no finer animal of his type existed in the United States.

However, as this may be, May Rose Cherub will run up against stiff competition at the Oregon fair, some of his closest rivals being members of Marjorie county herds.

Other fine entries in the Guernsey class are made by E. J. Mabey of Oregon City, who brought the top of his herd direct from the Guernsey lands two years ago, and is an exhibitor at the state fair here for the first time this year.

The Pacheco Cattle company of Hollister, Cal., has some of its finest Shorthorn here. Heading the list are Pacheco Lad, a huge white animal weighing 2400, and Collyer Kingwood, very nearly as large. The herd, which these nine entries represent, numbers 600 head of purebred Shorthorns, that roam the 2800 acres which comprise the Pacheco ranch, an old Spanish land grant, originally given by the Spanish government.

Bringing this herd north on the circuit is Norman Hale, a native of Somerset, England, who has been engaged in plotting prize herds on the Pacific circuit for the past twenty-six years, coming back time and again to the state fair here.

Yesterday every livestock superintendent and board member was moving like a shuttle from one livestock barn to another in an endeavor to double things up efficiently to accommodate the entries that kept arriving. The Red Pole was shifted into a big overgrown tent and the milk and angora goats herded together to make room for the newcomers.

The quality of the livestock is said by authorities to be much higher than any previously exhibited. There is an extra large showing this year of Brown Swiss. Awards given out in the Chester White section of the swine division give the following awards to Cass A. Nichols of Salem: Senior champion boar and grand champion boar, junior champion boar, senior champion sow and grand champion sow, junior champion sow, champion barrows and champion pen of barrows.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Thomas of Port Angeles, Wash., arrived Saturday and have pitched tent on the camp ground. They are regular campers, this being their fifteenth season. Retired, they find it a great pleasure to spend three months each year on the Salem grounds.

Quackless Duck and Brood of Ducklets Attract Attention

A quackless duck—something new in the duck world—with a brood of eleven little quackless ducklets, is one of the principal attractions in the poultry show this year, which is again headed by Edward Shearer of Estacada, who is entering upon his eleventh year in a similar capacity.

A pen of Mongolian pheasants, owned by Mrs. H. D. Moore of Hubbard, is another attraction. According to Mr. Shearer the geese and duck entries this year double that of past seasons, and the pigeon exhibit, while falling short a trifle in the point of number, is of much better quality. This is due to a change in the premium list this year, which made the classifications a little stricter than previously.

Judge William C. Coats of Seattle, for many years judge in the poultry division, was unable to be present this year, owing to illness. He is in Honolulu at the present time convalescing.

Judging began yesterday in the poultry department and will continue throughout the week. L. W. Wilschorn and A. E. Wolant of Portland are judging poultry. Robert V. Moore of San Leandro, Cal., passing on the pigeons. He was here last year.

In speaking of the pigeon exhibit, Mr. Moore said: "Oregon has a well balanced show this year. Much better than the one last season. There is usually a good deal of clashing between the commercial and utility breeders and the breeders of fancy or ornamental birds, but this is lacking here. There seems to be an absence of exhibitions of those who buy and sell merely, and an increase of those who make a specialty of breeding high class birds.

"I am especially pleased to note the interest in homing pigeons in this section. The homing pigeon is establishing a national sport and the northwest seems to be in on the game as well as other parts of the country."

Poultry awards announced to date are:

White Plymouth Rocks—First chick, second cock and second old pen, Mrs. Ella Plank, Woodburn; third cock, third hen, first old pen, first young pen, J. J. Herberberger, Hubbard; first cockerel, second hen, third old pen, John Corforth, Salem; second cockerel, Neal Thompson, Canby; third cockerel, third pullet, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Freidli, Multnomah; first hen, first pullet, Bert Senter, Hood River; second pullet, Charles P. Taylor, Shorewood.

Columbia Plymouth Rocks—First pullet, Mrs. W. H. Sargent, Portland; first young pen, Dorothy Kleinmuth, Canby.

Partridge Rocks—First cock and second cockerel, first, second and third pen, first pullet, Mrs. W. F. Starr, Salem.

Buff Plymouth Rocks—First cockerel, second cockerel, Clement R. Cain, Seaside; first and second hen, Mrs. Ella Plank, Woodburn.

"MELON" PIERCE COULD NOT LIFT IS ON DISPLAY

If you can lift a big Santiam watermelon on display in the Linn county booth, you can do something that Governor Pierce couldn't. This same heavy melon was on display in the Linn county fair and attracted the attention of the governor during his visit at the fair last week. He volunteered the information that he could lift any watermelon that ever grew on a vine, but failed miserably to budge this one from the floor.

This melon is a large stone with the precise shape and color of a big juicy melon. It was worn to its present form in the rugged waters of the old Santiam, and the colors were laid on by some buccolic artist who knew more about the color of melons than the man that made them.

When the governor was challenged to attempt lifting it it was lying on the floor in a dark corner of the melon booth. It looked like it would weigh about 18 pounds, and his excellency grabbed at it on that assumption. Harder and harder he tugged, but finally gave it up. He said he had no difficulty in lifting yearling steers, but would hereafter draw a line on melons that were raised on the bottom of the Santiam—river.

The booth is in charge of Franklin Gilkey of Seilo.

Pioneer Couple In Victoria Phaeton Horse Show Event

A feature of the horse show program Wednesday night will be the appearance in the ring of two of Salem's oldest pioneers, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Baker, who will ride in Oswald West's old-fashioned Victoria phaeton, driven by James "Stotty" Dryden and drawn by Harmony Mathias and Molina West's black hackney team.

Mr. Baker came to Oregon in 1849, crossing the plains with his parents in '46. Mrs. Baker came by way of the isthmus, arriving in Oregon in 1862. She is 80 years old. Mr. Baker is 86. They have resided in Salem continuously since 1862, forty years of this time being in their present location, 293 North Liberty street. Mr. Baker remembers attending a fair in Salem sixty years ago.

Their participation was thought to be a fitting thing on the eve of Wednesday, Salem's day.

Night horse show patrons will watch with interest the initial appearance in the Salem ring of Sinclair, one of the string of spectacular jumpers shown here in August in Ringling Brothers circus and purchased at that time by Mrs. J. H. Field of Portland. Mrs. Field will also enter Kentucky Bob, another jumper.

Mrs. W. R. Everdine, also of Portland, will show Mountain Missie remembered by local folk for past performances. Miss Dorothy McBride of Portland will enter Lil Web; Miss Ethel McElhinney will be represented by Spider and Black Diamond, a new jumper. She also is from Portland.

Mrs. Stanley C. E. Smith, Harry M. Kerron, Mrs. C. E. Grell, Mr. and Mrs. Matt McDougal and their children, Marion and Nat Jr., are other well known Portlanders who are here for the shows. Mrs. Smith is to show Armand, three-gaited horse; Daisy Deane, a hunter, and Jim Noble, also a hunter. McDougal has three hunters, a polo pony and one saddle pony. Mrs. Fred King is to enter a three-gaited saddle horse and there are a number of other horses of special mention.

The program for Wednesday night follows:

Overture.

Six-in-hand (draft).

Ladies' three-gaited saddle horse, 15.2 and over.

Cow horses with equipment.

Handy hunter jumping class.

Heavy harness horses, pairs 14.2 and over.

Singles in harness poles, under 12 hands.

Combination three-gaited.

Polo ponies.

Roadster pairs, over 14.2.

& Power company, and for twenty four years identified with that company in Salem. Mr. Wright for ten years has been at the head of the service department of the light company at the fair, owing to it that everyone gets just what he orders in the way of illumination. Mrs. Wright has assisted him for five years, being stationed in the company headquarters just north of the main entrance.

the guest of her cousin, Mrs. Francis Looney.

Mrs. E. O. Eastman of Gresham, who has been in camp for several days, left today for Omaha, where she goes as a delegate to the National convention of American War Mothers.

Miss Elizabeth Halley of Portland, representing the Oregonian at the state fair, is the guest for the week of Miss Margaret Rodgers.

L. J. Porter of Spokane, for thirty-seven years representing the Canadian government in the Pacific northwest, is on the fair grounds for his seventeenth time in connection with the Canadian government exhibit. He stated that Spokane folk were endeavoring to get a special rate on the railroad to Salem during the week, but in the event their effort failed would come here strong anyway.

Dr. and Mrs. Grant Smith of Portland, have been brief visitors at the fair, the guests of Albert Tosler.

Boys judging teams, representing a phase of industrial club work, were busy today judging eight classes of livestock. Fifteen counties sent teams, three boys in each. Classes being judged were: two beef cattle, two dairy cattle, two sheep and two of swine. L. J. Allen, assistant state club leader of Corvallis, was conducting the contests. Winners were expected to be announced late this evening, the successful contestants to be entitled to a free trip to Corvallis next summer and tuition in the summer school for three weeks.

Members of the Oregon Purebred Livestock association will hold their annual meeting Wednesday night in the new industrial club building on the fairgrounds.

Miss Eva J. Sands, who crowns the winning derby Wednesday, will be the guest for the day of the state fair board. At noon members will tend her a luncheon at one of the restaurants on the grounds.

Governor Pierce also being an honored guest, Miss Virginia Ringler and her attendants from Gresham will be shown similar attentions on Thursday.

Mrs. Edna L. Knight of Willows, California, is a conspicuous exhibitor in the livestock division, being represented by twenty head of Jerseys.

STRAIGHT HEATS DETERMINE 2.15 FEATURE EVENT

Straight heats for first, second and third horses was the order in the 2.15 feature race at Lone Oak track, yesterday afternoon, the opening day of the state fair races. The special trot was different, offering much opportunity for speculation. Mark Watts taking first money after coming in fourth in the first heat.

The "Wild Horse Men," running race, a 2-year-old stakes for Oregon and Washington horses, went to Cleo's Rochester, owned by D. J. Bagley of Vancouver.

One of the five-furlong races was marred by a accident that befell Jackie Herman Reilig when his mount ran off the course at an unfenced point, stumbled and pitched Reilig on his head and shoulders. He fled motionless from the lungs but declared he would ride today.

STATE FAIR SIDELIGHTS

William Tennant of the Portland police force, stopping off in Salem on his way north from a vacation spent in the south, has stopped off to assist as a campground officer this week. Coming up direct from Tijuana, Mexico, Mr. Tennant tells a grab-bag of the results of the recent million-dollar fire in that place.

Abner Lewis, whose father's name appears upon the monument at Champoo, was visiting pioneers in tented city the first of the week. Mr. Lewis lives in the Waldo hills.

A. R. Brown, born in Oregon in 1855, and whose parents crossed the plains to Oregon in 1843, is among the campers at the state fair.

Moving picture men will be on hand Saturday to take pictures of the automobile style parade, which forms at noon in front of the Marjorie hotel. These will be shown the week following throughout this section and elsewhere as part of the Oregonian screen review.

"Bees, How They Live and Work" is the title of a moving picture which will be put on several times during each day in the bee and honey house on the fair grounds. Prof. H. A. Scullen, of the department of entomology, of the Oregon Agricultural college, will show this reel and will supplement it with talks concerning the exceedingly interesting thing, the bee. Hours for showing of this picture are set for ten, two and four o'clock.

Little six-year-old Jean West, daughter of Oregon's ex-governor and Mrs. West, will appear in the tan bark arena of the stadium during the week, riding in the pony class. This announcement recalls little Miss Jean's initial appearance in a horse show ring, that of the Pacific International. A newspaper clipping of the date of November 21, 1920, carried the following account of it: "Little Jean West, really had the honor of being the first performer at the Portland horse show, for with her father and sister, Miss Helen West, both of whom are clever riders, she went out to the big stadium last Sunday and as evidence of her undoubtedly inherited fondness for horses expressed a desire to ride 'top.' Doris McCleave's miniature pony.

"Consent was readily granted and the tiny, two and one-half year old rider was outfitted with gleaming spurs and regulation riding accoutrements. She started out around the big ring, much to the delight of the big Sunday crowd of onlookers. All Jean became a bit flustered by so much laughter and applause—perhaps, well, any-circle, just as she was finishing the way she fell off. It was an inglorious finish to so splendid a beginning, but seeing that the small equestrienne was unharmed, none the less enjoyable from the point of view of the audience."

Mrs. C. C. Walker of Portland was in Salem yesterday, bringing down the exhibit of posters made by Day Murphy, well-known artist of Portland.

A group of local musicians have been asked to augment the Douglas County Concert band, the official state fair band, at the fair this week. Among the Salem players will be Ivan Martin, John Steelhammer, Oscar Steelhammer, Adolph Bonbuck. Several Portland musicians will also assist the band during the week.

Judge and Mrs. J. T. Hunt are domiciled in their cottage, number 7, Wisdom avenue.

Smith Stephens and his sister, Mrs. E. Cooper of Hopewell are in camp for the sixty-second time.

On the bulletin board at the camp ground headquarters under the caption, "Our Campers Dead," appear the names of Judge W. H. Downing, Shaw; Mark Holmes, Salem; Mrs. Mark Harburt, Albany; Mrs. L. B. Miller, Stayton; Mrs. John Veretec, Amity; Mrs. J. W. Young, Salem, and Clayton Young of Newport. Mr. Downing was not only at one time president of the state fair board but of the Campers' association as well. Mrs. Harburt was the wife of a one-time state fair board member who also held office in the association.

George Myers of Corvallis is tenting at number 4 Looney. Mr. Myers was born in Polk county in 1840. His parents came to Oregon in 1847.

John M. English and his family of Stayton are occupying their cottage on the camp ground.

The running events this week will be named in honor of a group of new pictures put out by Paramount, these being recent releases of Rint-Tintin dog pictures about to be released.

Probably no one is better known on the state fair grounds than David Wright, superintendent in Salem of the Portland Railway, Light

Today the two-year-old stake is programmed as "Wild Horse Men," the opening stake is "The Vanishing American," and the trial stake is "The Pony Express." Other names to be used during the week are: "The Lucky Devil," "Wild, Wild Susan," "The Ancient Highway," "The Liberty Special," and the "Paramount Special," or handicap.

Mrs. J. T. Beckwith and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Simpson are in their cottage on Wisdom avenue.

On the campgrounds there met Saturday for the first time, two men who were born in Oregon in 1849, and whose parents crossed the plains in 1847. They were Warren Plath of Salem and George Myers of Corvallis.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hoeye are receiving visitors at their cottage, 22 Wisdom avenue. Mrs. Hoeye celebrated her 73rd birthday in Oregon City this year. This event usually occurs during the week of state fair. Mrs. Hoeye has attended 61 of the 64 fairs held on the present site.

Mrs. Ellery W. Stone, (Helena West) of Oakland, California, is making an entry of saddle horses in the night horse show.

Mrs. Alfred Dineo of Portland, remembered here as Gretta Richmond, is among those identified for many years with the state fair, who is again being welcomed back. From here Mrs. Dineo goes on to fill a position in the business department of the Pacific International.

Mrs. Effie Drew has come up again from San Francisco, to be assistant to J. H. McClintock, auditor.

Ray J. Fox of Midville, Idaho, well-known to state fair patrons, is entering upon his seventh year as entry clerk in the livestock department.

An American beauty product, which takes place each day at 11, 2 and 3 o'clock in the O. A. C. section of the educational building has the following schedule worked out for the appearance of a group of pretty girls: Monday and Tuesday, Lola Dennis, Freshwater; Wednesday and Thursday, Helen Griffice, Corvallis; Friday and Saturday, Jean McClew, Eugene. Salem girls taking part are: Maurine Styles, Florence Power, Mildred Pugh and Kreta Janz.

Miss Kathryn Gunnell, who, following her visit to the Pacific International Photographers' convention, held in San Francisco, early this month, immediately left for Pendleton, where she took the publicity photographs for the Round-Up, has promised to find time to be out at the fairgrounds each afternoon this week and explain the photographic exhibit in the art department.

When one looks at the handsome new industrial club building on the fair grounds, one's thoughts travel back to that time twelve years ago when girls and boys club activities originated at the state fair. Mrs. Edith Tosler Weathered, then a member of the fair board, brought the matter up before that body, was successful in putting her idea across, and it was she who, at her own expense, took care of the first eight youngsters who ever exhibited at Oregon's fair.
