Name of a number of Salem men were sent to headquarters at Marshfield with the understanding that a charter for the local branch of the order would immediately be forthcoming.

"I just heard today," said Coach Rathbun of Willamette university this morning, "that Walter Page, fullback on the Willamette team of 1895, was the man who introduced football in Salem. It came here in 1893. H. H. Dillner, now a Salem dentist, and Billy Evans, proprietor of a bookstore in Salem, were the first two candidates he had for his team. When people saw them going down the street with their football togs on everybody that they were crazy." The following year, 1894, W. C. Hawley, then president of the university, and now a congressman, actually played part of the season, Rathbun insists.

ANNUAL PARADE OF FAIR CAMPERS IS HELD TONIGHT

Tonight, at the state fair grounds will take place the annual campers parade, the last of the season. It will start at 7:30 o'clock and will be in connection with the annual event. This parade, which starts out at half past seven o'clock from Albert Tostler's cottage on the camp grounds, will move on to the main grounds, stopping first in front of the administration building, where Governor Pierce will address the campers. The parade will welcome them, Mrs. Edith Tostler Weatherly of Portland, and Dr. George Hoey of Oregon City, president of the Campers' association, responding. The marchers will circle the stadium ring, and make their way later through the agricultural pavilion and educational building.

L. K. Cogswell, of Chehalis, for twenty-seven years an exhibitor at the fair and member of the camp ground association, will head the parade. Exhibitors are asked to fall in line with the campers.

According to precedent, paraders will be attired in fantastic regalia, and will use as musical instruments anything obtainable equal to the demand.

The parade, first instituted at the Gladstone state fair grounds by the late John Minto of Salem, is one of the leading features at the end of the fair.

RODGERS SAYS PACIFIC FLIGHT WELL PLANNED

which statement flatly contradicted Mitchell's charge that preparations were handled by "non-flying officers."

"So far as the navy department was concerned," Rodgers continued, "I want to limit in providing all that was desired."

"The planes were tested. The tests showed them capable of the flight. We would have reached Hawaii, had the wind not been against us, or if the plane had given the same mileage it did on the tests."

"Had we found a rescue ship on the first day we could have gone on."

"I was fully satisfied with my crew and personnel," he declared. "Everything was in my hands. Regardless of whatever mistakes were made before or after I challenge any one to make a just criticism of the Hawaiian flight."

New Honolulu Needed

Rodgers was asked if this nation could be attacked by a foreign power with airplanes capable of crossing either ocean with 2000 pound bombs.

"No," he answered, "and unless some new engine is developed, it is not probable that this will ever be true."

This also differed from the ideas of Col. Mitchell.

Rodgers told the board that development of the airplane had made necessary the establishment of a department of national defense, which would include both the army and the navy.

"The need for a proper scientific organization of the national defense," he said, "was plainly apparent."

The commander of the Hawaiian flight, however, opposed either a united air force or a separate air corps, such as have been urged by certain witnesses before the board, declaring the problem engaging the study of the board was one involving essentially a revision of present organizations. So far as an aviation problem he believed an interior problem he believed the question might be satisfactorily solved for the moment by proper establishment of an aviation budget, by improvement of personnel situation, fixing by law the retention of officers in the line of the navy of a special list, and by "establishment of a strong aviation section in operation and final solution," he added, "appoint the strongest man obtainable as secretary of the naval defense, give him a good staff, let him work out the organization required, and when ready take over both the army and navy."

"Now last but not most important, a point which I feel safe in asserting is that we have heretofore mentioned—defense by the air is no cheap thing as seems to be the popular opinion. I have not the figures and I doubt if they exist, but I have a conviction they would not be pleasant to look upon."

SEELING BOARD ACTION REGRETTED BY COOLIDGE

Washington, Oct. 2.—(A. P.)—The shipping board, in the opinion of President Coolidge, acted unwisely in stripping President Taft of the fleet corporation of his powers, but it was indicated today at the White House that he contemplates no new move as a result of the board's attitude.

"Ways and means must be found to reduce this cost. The matter of costs is one which it seems to me you must face before your duties are completed in this committee. Some such great reorganization as I have suggested is required to effect a great reduction and thus permit aviation to take its proper place in the national defense without breaking the United States treasury."

1. The club traveling the longest distance and having the largest representation.
2. The best advertising stunt for a community.
3. The best stunt staged during the day.

Judging in almost every department was being wound up today and the late arrivals on the grounds were seeing the benefit of knowing just how awards were made. All of the exhibits have been exceptionally well preserved and the deterioration usually attendant upon the closing days is not apparent.

SEEKS DIVORCE BECAUSE WIFE WORKS IN CAFE

Because his wife went to work in a Salem restaurant as a waitress, H. L. Ekerson wishes a divorce, according to complaint filed in circuit court.

He alleges that his wife, Josephine Ekerson, has failed to properly discharge her duties, and when she took the restaurant job, he declared that he was unable to find and furnish necessary supplies and funds for caring for the home. His wife's duties have been such, he declares, that his meals have not been prepared at home, his home has not been kept comfortable and her hours such that his rest has been broken and his health is being ruined. He declares that all of these things have worked a great hardship on him. They were married September 6, 1923, at Marshfield.

Dora Childs of Jefferson, also is seeking a divorce from John H. Childs, on a charge of desertion. She claims that her husband deserted her in August, 1924.

According to the complaint property rights have been settled out of court and she has agreed to accept $25 a month for the support of the children, which, the complaint says, with other property given her, will be ample for the support of herself and children, whose custody she also seeks.

MONSTERS ROAM IN FEATURED FILM JOURNAL MATINEE

times that of an elephant, monsters with unbelievable appearance and unpronounceable names, fighting one another with modern looting on—all this and a lot more can be seen by any youngster 12 years of age or less, as a special guest of the Capital Journal at the Oregon theater tomorrow morning. All that is required is the accompanying coupon, plus 5 cents, for any single admission. Without the coupon, the price is 10 cents. Parents may accompany their children by paying the regular admission price.

The show will begin at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The film itself, which took seven years in production, is as faithfully accurate in its reproduction of the prehistoric marvels that once roamed the earth, as is scientifically possible. Experts, having studied for years the bones left here and there by the creatures who passed out of existence millions of years ago, declare that they did look and act just as they are represented in the film.

Beside Love, Lewis Stone, Wallace Beery and Lloyd Hughes head the human cast, sharing honors with the prehistoric monsters. Supporting them are more than 2000 other players who participate in the huge scenes showing the return of the explorers in London.

Just as an example of what the picture is like, a monster brontosaurus, brought back to London from the "Lost World" by the hairy group of adventurers, breaks loose in one scene. Running amok in the heart of London's shopping district, the creature proceeds to wreck the metropolis and finally crashes into the Tower when the famous London bridge collapses under his weight.

BANK OFFICE BELONGS HERE RULES COURT

involved the court proceeds:

"It is alleged in the alternative writ and taken as confessed for the purposes of the demurrer that the secretary of state has furnished suitable quarters in the state house for the office of superintendent of banks. It so appears from the facts existing out of existence that the secretary of state has removed his office of superintendent of bank and the state banking department and all of the state records, files and documents belonging to and a part of said office and department from suitable quarters provided by the secretary of state at Salem, Oregon, to the city of Portland. The state banking department only maintains one desk and one clerk at the former quarters of said superintendent of banks and banking department in the state house at Salem, Oregon. These allegations are admitted by the demurrer."

Contention Over-ruled

"The contention by the defendant that the plaintiff has no legal capacity to maintain the action inasmuch as the salary and expenses incident to the banking department are paid from fees received through said banking department and the law prohibits any salary or expenses from being paid from any funds in the state treasury not received through the state banking department," the court ruled.

"The general rule is that where private or corporate rights are affected the relation must show an interest. However, the rule is established by a preponderance of authorities that where the question is one of public right and the subject of the mandamus is to procure the enforcement of a public duty, the relation need not show he has any legal or special interest in the result; it being sufficient that he is interested as a citizen in having the law executed and the duty in question enforced. 18 R. L. C. 323."

The court here cites quotations from Oregon cases to further prove its contention and then resumes:

"These cases are an absolute answer to the contention of the defendant that in relator, George Putnam, has no capacity to maintain the action.

"It appears from the alternative writ that the relator is a resident, citizen, taxpayer and legal voter of the county of Marion, state of Oregon and of the city of Salem. This is admitted by the demurrer."

A Public Officer

"The superintendent of banks is a public officer whose duty it is to administer a public office in compliance with the statute pertaining to such office and therefore such a citizen as has such interest in the operation and maintenance of such office as to maintain mandamus and compel the superintendent of banks to maintain his office in the place provided by law.

"The second question that another action is pending between the same parties for the same cause may be dismissed with the statement that such fact does not appear on the face of the alternative writ of mandamus.

"It is next urged, and counsel for defendant have cited many authorities to the effect that courts will not interfere with an officer in the exercise of his discretionary powers. The court has no quarrel with counsel on this question and will concede such to be the law; but in this case there is no discretion. The statute says that the superintendent of banks shall maintain his office in Salem in suitable quarters provided by the secretary of state and that he may, when considered by him to be convenient and expedient establish branch offices within the city of Portland."

Funerals

Private funeral services for the late Marcus Eugene Young will be held tomorrow morning at ten thirty from the Terwilliger funeral home with Rev. J. J. Evans reading the service. Committal services will be held at the City View cemetery. The deceased was a member of the pressmen's union, the musicians' union and the national guard.
