COURT DENIES PLEA TO DELAY CONVICT CASE

aspect the bull pen at the prison or any other place about the prison which he believes should be examined in connection with the case "but that doesn't set aside the fact that counsel had a month's time in which to get an order from this court."

Judge King's contention on advocating his motion for a continuance was that he was compelled to talk to Murray through a heavy screen over his cell, with mesh not more than 1/2 inch in diameter, that this condition was not removed until September 28, when he stated the officials reluctantly agreed a different arrangement.

He declared to the court that it seems strange with the number of guards employed at the prison that prison officials would be afraid to permit the prisoners be allowed to talk to counsel under reasonable regulations.

He stated when he desired to look at the bull pen the warden said he never allowed anyone to look at the bull pen. Further, he stated, the warden said the bull pen had nothing to do with the case. This, King said he told the warden, was a matter for him as counsel for the prisoner to determine, and not a matter for decision by the warden.

"I can't see why they would be afraid to let me look at the bull pen unless they are ashamed of it—unless there is something there they do not wish anyone to see," said Judge King.

The state attacked Judge King's petition on the ground that the statute requires that the motion be made in the form of an affidavit and also that it be made by the defendant himself. Allan Carson for the state also attacked the motion on other statutory grounds.

The argument was delayed for some little time when it was discovered that the petition was in behalf of all three of the defendants, but that only Murray was in court. Officials rushed to the prison and returned with Wilcox and Kelly.

In contrast to the preceding appearance of the three men when crowds thronged about the court house and into the building, there were only five spectators in the court room today in addition to court attaches and attorneys.
