BRITISH LORDS DEFEAT LIVING FARM WAGE BILL

London, Eng.—The Marquess of Lincolnshire, owner of 23,000 acres, surprised his political friends as well as foes by pleading recently in the house of lords for his bill designed to give a "living wage" to farm hands. Many of the members, landowners themselves, testified that they were in sympathy with the working man and cause, but his reply was: "Tut, tut—I was one myself two or three generations ago."

The Marquess of Lincolnshire said he knew what was a living wage on the land in England, and he made it plain that he practiced what he preached for his farm hands were receiving 46 shillings a week, considerably more than made necessary by law. As a result of his consideration, the marquess explained, only 19 families out of all those hundreds on his vast estate had left the land during the last 60 years.

"Only six hours have been given to discussion of agriculture in the house of lords since 1905," said the marquess, "and I consider it more than a national scandal; it is a national crime and a national disgrace."

The bill was defeated by a substantial majority.
