HALE ADVOCATES WORLD COURT AS MEANS TO PEACE

Declaring that the world court of the league of nations involves the principle of "substitution of reason for force and law for war," Dean Hale of the University of Oregon law school urged entrance of the United States into the world court in a speech before the Salem Lions club at their luncheon here this noon.

"Why in the name of reason," he asked, "do we refuse to welcome to our doorstep the child of our own international efforts?"

Dean Hale's plea was for entrance into the court only, not into the league of nations.

Explaining the workings of the world court, the speaker stated that it consists of 11 regular judges and 4 deputies, no two of whom are permitted to be of the same nationality, and all of whom are elected by majority vote of the assembly of the league of nations and then by majority vote of the council of the league.

There are at present 48 nations of the 62 nations of the world who belong to the world court, he said, and a total of 55 belonging to the league of nations. The speaker declared positively that the court is not dependent upon the league in any way, judges once elected not being subject to recall or any other influence by the assembly or the council.

Dean Hale traced the development of the present world court, going back in history as far as 1899, when the Hague tribunal was formed.

In conclusion the speaker stated that the course of, and prevention for, war is largely a matter of international psychology. "Before we can find a way to peace there must be a will for peace," he said.

WILLOS AND KELLEY CASE IS DELAYED

Donald, John A. Jefferson, Fred G. Delano, Walter Skelton, John M. Watson and A. N. Moores were excused by the defense attorney and Emma B. Condit, Ethel M. Hubbs and Nellie G. Baldwin by the state.

Try Both Together

Late yesterday Will R. King, attorney for the defense, moved that Kelley and Willos be tried together, not separately as he requested after the indictments. His purpose in asking that they be tried together was so that each could be called to testify in behalf of the other. The motion was not contested by the state.

Much of the evidence that was submitted in the trial of Murray will be reiterated in the trial of Kelley and Willos. For this reason and the fact that Murray was the leader of the escaping trio and the most picturesque the interest on the part of the public has waxed to a marked degree. The court room was only meagerly filled with spectators.

Willos Unconcerned

The demeanor of Kelley and Willos is considerable different in the court room from that of Murray. The latter talked much with his attorneys, often advising them what questions to ask witnesses. While he was unemotional, he almost continuously was busy with pencil and paper.

Of the three, Willos seems to appear in court as the most unconcerned. He sits perfectly at ease and chews gum. Kelley is not so rugged of feature and heart than either of the other two. Kelley and Willos both appeared yesterday afternoon unshaven and roughly dressed. But today both were well groomed as was Murray at all times.

MURRAY COOL WITH DEATH FACING HIM

"I guess they won't arrest me for putting my hat on in court."

Wins Admiration

The popular sympathy which has been with Murray since his capture in Centralia as a result of information given by an informer stayed with him to the last. As he was marched out of the court room on his way back to the prison there were several heard to remark that while they felt that justice had been done, they "hated to see the kid go." There was not one but admitted admiration for the convict's nerve, although there were evidences that his smile last night was forced.

The jury sent out word that it had reached a verdict at 8:45 o'clock last night, its agreement having been accomplished on the sixth ballot and after deliberating since 4 o'clock in the afternoon, with the exception of slightly more than an hour's time taken out for dinner. Word was immediately sent to the attorneys for the state and defense and prison authorities were requested to bring Murray back to the court room. As the convict passed through the halls of the court house there was a marked contrast in his bearing to that he had evidenced when being returned to the prison at the conclusion of the trial in the afternoon.

Wagers on Outcome

In the afternoon he had appeared confident and cheerful, and as the jury retired to its deliberations he said to Deputy Warden Lillis and said: "I'll bet you a pack of cigarettes they don't hang me."

Murray's father, mother and two sisters, who were attentive spectators during the progress of the trial, were not present last night when the verdict was brought in, nor was Mrs. Sweeney, widow of the murdered guard, who was one of the first witnesses put on the stand by the state.

Judge Kelly set 10 o'clock next morning for the date for passing sentence on Murray.

Later in the evening Judge King announced that a motion would be filed at the proper time for a new trial, and that if this is returned the case will be carried to the supreme court. His only comment on the outcome of the trial was to the effect that he had not expected the jury to reach a verdict in so short a time. He gave no intimation of the grounds upon which he would ask a retrial, or base his appeal.

The case came to a conclusion with surprise and amazement yesterday afternoon with the closing argument of District Attorney John Carson and the instructions of Judge Kelly to the jury. Together they took less than an hour to lay the case in the jury's hands, after Judge King had consumed the entire morning and an hour of the afternoon session with his plea for leniency for Murray.

Carson, in his summary, reviewed the case briefly, scouted the defense plea of insanity as absurd in view of the mental processes the convict admitted existing during the break and charged the jury with the responsibility of enforcement of the criminal laws of the state and demanded a verdict which would not only deter other convicts from committing the same crime, but would safeguard and protect the lives of the guards at the prison who have sworn to live up to the trust placed in them by the people.

The district attorney charged that to return Murray to the prison under a 100 sentence would be of one-half of it as long as he lives. Upon the death of the husband all rights in the land will go on to the child.

If they should be an effort on the part of both together to obtain a divorce, the court could not legally allow the separation. She could not obtain a divorce from him so long as he behaved himself and did not give her reason upon which to base a suit. In such case the only way she could obtain a separation would be by acting herself in such a way that he would be driven to obtain the separation. In case she resorted to this method, the husband would be entitled to demand one-third of her property at the time he suits for divorce.

All things considered, local attorneys agree that the prospective bride may get more than her $400 worth. She may have one consolation, however—she will have definite rights in the $400 which she gives him. In case she legally obtains a divorce from him at the end of the three months, it is possible that she may get back part of the value of the money. If he keeps it in the form of cold cash, however, he will probably get away with all of it, that is, what is left after paying household expenses, for which she may legally demand payment from him.

Meanwhile applications for the position continue to come from men in all parts of the United States. Today a wire was received by The Capital Journal from Cincinnati, a man being read a report of the advertisement in the Cincinnati Post. The applicant "wants to get in touch" with Miss Jordan, and demands her picture to begin with. Another application, arrived from Ashland today. Two letters have come from Tacoma.

To date there have been a total of 34 men made application by wire or letter and three in person. Miss Jordan continues to wait.
