ACTRESS LOSES COUNT OF MANY ROLES ENACTED

Miss Anne Berryman, leading lady with the Forrest Taylor Dramatic Stock company, booked to appear here at the Heilig theater next Tuesday in the comedy drama "In Love With Love," can't for the life of her tell you off-hand how many different roles and plays she has been cast in.

She was asked the question off-hand and with a surprised look in her eye she replied promptly: "Couldn't tell you unless I did some figuring longer than a crossword puzzle."

Miss Berryman then gave some idea of the difficulty of such a task—one, she said, which should be left to a statistician.

"During our summer engagement in Portland of 13 weeks we played 13 different plays, and that is about what I have been doing ever since I went on the stage as a very young girl," she recalled. "You folks who see the stage play in its finished state have no idea of the prodigious amount of work which has been required to bring it to the point exacted by the little before he would say it was ready for the public. Often some little scene that doesn't require over five or ten minutes on the stage, is rehearsed five or more times every day until our director is satisfied that we have absorbed the spirit of the scene."

"Frequently I have parts that require the memorizing of 40 or 50 pages of lines and these must be letter perfect before Mr. Taylor takes me on stage. I have often told you that I had appeared in 400 or 500 plays, I do not believe I would be far from accuracy."

"The life of the actor and actress is not the smooth, flowery path pictured by most people. In our regular engagements we play nine performances a week, seven in the evening and two matinees. Yet, that is only a small part of our labor. We are up the next morning bright and early ready for the rehearsal of our next play. From there we grab a hurried meal and rush off to a matinee twice a week. After the matinee, another hurried meal and then two or three hours of study, and then again another night performance. Except for last week, when we had a lay-off, I haven't known a moment's relaxation for the last 13 weeks."

"No, the life of an actor or actress is far from the rosy path which stage-struck girls picture."
