

TURKEY SUPPLY IS BALANCED BY HIGHER PRICES

Portland, Or., Nov. 23.—(A.P.)—Enough turkeys are believed in sight to meet the holiday requirements in this market. This is the opinion of Portland wholesale and commission men, this morning, after the Sunday arrivals had been unpacked and the remainder of the shipping orders filled.

Receipts are far short of previous years but prices have soared to such a level that dealers look for a lighter demand. The holiday bird today costs the consumer 55 to 60 cents a pound with prospects that prices will be even higher tomorrow.

Sunday arrivals were disappointing. The commission houses were open and busy unpacking, grading and filling orders. Local buyers were on the ground obtaining their requirements and stocks sold as fast as they were unpacked. The wholesale market jumped up to 45 and 47 cents this morning while holding firm at that level, although the late express shipments were not yet down.

Very few live turkeys were coming in but they are not wanted. It is late now for retail dealers to dress birds for the Thanksgiving trade.

Practically all of the shipping orders are filled. Wholesale commission men and retailers are opposed to any runaway market. They feel that the grower is getting a good profit on their birds now and further advances may do more harm than good. It would most assuredly reflect on the consumption and might easily cause a serious break in prices at the last moment with a lot of turkeys left unsold.

Current prices are justified, however, dealers point out as Portland is the lowest market in the country.

Receipts of country dressed meats were very light along the street today and the call from the butcher trade was good. Dealers are getting 16 to 16 1/2 cents for choice calves and 16 to 16 1/2 cents for choice light pork.

The local butter and egg markets opened steady with no change in the situation over the week-end. Live poultry receipts have been heavy during the past few days but they are moving readily at steady prices.

LOGAN GROWERS ACT TO PREVENT WINTER FREEZE

Loganberry growers are taking extra care this fall in making ready for the coming season, according to Earl Percy who has visited many of the yards in moving about the valley.

It is noticeable that growers generally are training their vines down low this year, he states, rather than putting their canes up on the wire as fully 50 per cent of the growers used to do.

He declares that generally speaking the patches are in fine condition as the fall has been very favorable to the loganberry and the canes are not bowed still as in some seasons, the canes being considerably more limber than ordinarily.

Some growers are staking their canes down to the ground while he has noticed a few have cut them off and dropped them to the young canes as a frost protection. Numerous other precautions are being taken such as the move on the part of W.H. McElchrist to place straw over a part of his patch to prevent frost damage.

For the past few years the heavy frosts have been in December and growers are beginning to figure on them during that time. The frosts have come so early canes have not been hardened enough to resist the heavy freezing conditions. It is expected that most growers, because of these facts, will delay their training until the latter part of January.

Percy estimates that if a normal production is had the coming year there should be twice the tonnage next year there was this year. There has been no decrease in the big patches and generally the vines have been well taken care of, ensuring a good crop unless weather conditions cause heavy damage.

sel, Representative Frank Reid of Illinois, to an expression of his opinion on various phases of aircraft development. The colonel testified that at the end of the World war aviation was just beginning to come into its own, and had the conflict gone on, a destructive air warfare would have been directed against Germany's

"nerve centers."

He then recited a long succession of recommendations regarding aviation made by him and rejected by the war department. He said he never had been able to have a study made of the precautions a city like New York should take to defend itself from an air attack.

"If an enemy came within 100 miles of New York," he said, "he could stand off in an airship, after picking up an identifying point,
