OREGON CAN AFFORD TO REALIZE FULLY ON ITS INVESTMENT IN THE OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

More scientific farmers and fewer electricians would be good for agriculture, and agriculture is the greatest lasting resource of the state. I am not thinking of the graduates of the Oregon Agricultural college who are the sons of owners of farm lands; I am thinking of the young men who should be running dairies, but for lack of means are driven into something that promises quick salaries. They wind up in the cities, instead of on the farm.

Has Settlement Plan

"When the state acquires title to lands in an irrigation district under the plan above outlined, let the commission sell it to young men marked for the purpose by the Oregon Agricultural college. Amortize the sale price on a 20-year basis. Impose conditions of operation under the direction of an expert of the college. You would then make a dairy center of each irrigation district, and dairymen who properly conduct their plants are usually able to pay their debts."

Wilford Allen of Grants Pass, president of the Oregon Reclamation congress, announced members of the committee for re-financing plan for irrigation projects in the state to present a bill to the next legislature, to include W. Lair Thompson of Portland, Perry Capper of Salem, Ivan Oakes of eastern Oregon, Whitney L. Boise of Portland and Sam H. Brown of Gervais.

Pierce Is Speaker

That the irrigated and drained areas must feed the increasing demand for food, and that brighter days are ahead for the people who produce the things that the world must eat and wear were the thoughts emphasized by Governor Pierce at the noon luncheon of the conference.

"The time is just around the corner," said the governor, "when the whole country is going to need more foodstuffs. Twenty-four years ago I predicted that this country would consume 550,000,000 bushels of wheat. Last year we consumed over 600,000,000 bushels."

The governor emphasized the significance of the "tremendous increase in population every year." He admitted that the state had gone too far with irrigation

THE ETERNAL MAN

We know that the real man is indestructible, that he has an existence independent of the physical body, that the body is merely the instrument fashioned by some inscrutable law of being to serve as his means of earthly expression. We know that sooner or later it will be outgrown by the immortal man, when a gentle hand will loose it, allowing him to slip from it like a butterfly emerging from the chrysalis.

School Savings Develop Habits of Thrift

In 1919-20 the first comprehensive statistics were available showing progress made by school savings bank accounts.

Since then the number of schools with such departments have increased 271.4 percent; enrollment in school savings districts, 278.9 percent; participants 520.2 percent and deposits, 506.1 percent.

In other words, there are 2,869,497 school children with savings accounts who have deposited a total of $16,961,560.72

It's a fine thing to know the foreign languages, to know all the dinosaurs, fossils, trees, flowers and fish by name, to pal with Julius Caesar, Robin Hood, Lucrezia de Borgia, Schopenhauer, Plato and the Man With the Iron Mask, but it is also essential for a child in school to learn to save a little money.

Habits of thrift or extravagance are usually formed in childhood and it is as essential to instill the producing and saving idea in the mind of the child and young person as it is to teach them habits of culture and religion.

The three million children who now have savings accounts set a good example. There is less apt to be destructive labor or political agitation in a nation with millions of savings accounts because a man with a cash capital is in a position to better care for his family and secure the conveniences and luxuries of life. Therefore, he does not spend his time envying his neighbor and becoming dissatisfied with life.

The First National Bank believes that ideals of thrift and the saving of a reasonable amount of one's earnings are principles that should be taught in the home and in the school.
