PACIFIC GIVEN STANDARD RATE AMONG COLLEGES

Pacific College, Newberg, Or., Dec. 14.—Word was received here today from the United States bureau of education that Pacific college had been put on the list of standard colleges, according to an announcement by Levi T. Pennington, president.

Once before, in 1921, the college authorities thought the campaign was ended but before their application could be acted on the department changed its ruling and started to count nothing but cash in determining the amount of the endowment. Although the educational requirements were fully met the campaign was delayed.

The campaign was continued and on November 9 at a meeting of the leading citizens of Newberg, with some from Portland and Salem, subscriptions for cash payments passed the $200,000 required by the educational bureau. As soon as the cash could be collected, President Pennington went east and presented the matter personally to the authorities in Washington, D. C. and tonight word was received that the college had been definitely passed as standard and placed on the list with other standard colleges of Oregon.

Plans are being completed for continuing the campaign for additional funds to insure the necessary income to take care of further developments of the college.

THREE PLANETS WILL BE SEEN IN GROUP THIS WEEK

Three of the four brilliant objects in the night sky will appear in close proximity and Jupiter will appear to touch the dark border of the new moon, as seen from Oregon and Washington point, in the early evening of Thursday, December 17 according to Miss Jessie Short, instructor in mathematics at Reed College, Portland.

Jupiter's near obscuration by the moon will take place at 4:40 p. m., only about 10 minutes after sunset, and the brightness of the sky may make it impossible to see the star at its nearest approach to earth's satellite, Miss Short says. But for an hour or two after sunset on the evenings of December 17 and 19 the moon, Jupiter and Venus will be close together in the western sky. In the early evening of December 19 the path of Venus will approach almost as near to the rim of the moon as did that of Jupiter two days earlier. Then on successive night the position of the moon will be farther east among the stars, leaving Jupiter and Venus to the west of it. Venus now is much the brighter of the two brilliant planets.

Mars, the third of the brilliant planets, will be visible in the eastern sky in the early morning hours on these days.

NEW-DAY JEWETT ANNOUNCED; DESIGNED FOR MODERN NEEDS

Distinctive Features Include Steel Bodies and Hydraulic Four-Wheel Brakes As Standard Equipment.

A distinctive new automobile, the New-Day Jewett, designed to meet the changed conditions of motoring in America, is presented to the public today by the Paige-Detroit Motor Car company, represented here by the Tramm Motor Car Co.

The New-Day Jewett, which enters the field of automobiles in the thousand-dollar class, is a six-cylinder car embodying many special features to help solve the problems of the modern owner and driver.

In designing the car, both chassis and body, the Paige-Detroit company says, it was the aim of the engineers to produce a car perfectly adapted to present day conditions in the United States, where traffic congestion demands easy handling, positive braking, quiet riding, and high power to give quick response and to obviate frequent gear changes, in combination with a body that attains compactness without reducing the passenger space. The necessity for utilizing small parking spaces and the ability to thread one's way through crowded highways were prime considerations in the design.

It is because of the car's unique adaptability to present and future conditions that the name "New-Day Jewett" was adopted.

Among its leading features are Paige hydraulic four-wheel brakes, standard on all models, making it the lowest priced car with hydraulic equipment; improved steel construction in the closed car models, with a noteworthy increase in safety through the resulting narrow pillars, the dangerous "blind spots" being virtually eliminated; and new-day ease of control in combination with the performance qualities for which the Jewett has long been favorably known.

The body engineers have scored a remarkable success, having provided for the new car the identical inside dimensions as the much higher-priced models, achieving a car of unusual spaciousness and comfort.

Riding qualities also compare favorably with the costlier models. The New-Day cars being equipped with springs of exactly the same measurements (36 in. front, 54 in. rear) as in the older Jewett.

In appearance and construction, the New-Day Jewett closely follows its predecessors in the Jewett line; in fact, wherever possible its makers have followed exactly the standard Paige practices.

The closed models of the new car are offered.

The engine, following Jewett and Paige practice, is of the L-head type, with the six cylinders cast in a single block, with detachable head. Its bore and stroke are 2 3/4 x 4 1/2, while the actual brake horsepower is 40.

The crankshaft is a heavy drop-forging, heat-treated and ground, supported by four large main bearings. The front end drive is by silent chain. A rear-type oil pump maintains pressure lubrication to all main and connecting rod bearings, timing chain and camshaft.

The axles are the Paige type, heavy duty. The steering spindles are mounted on ball-bearings.

Paige hydraulic brakes contract over 12-inch drums on all four wheels. Only one flexible connection is used for the rear wheels, connecting with a metal tube that runs across and the rear axle supplies the fluid to both wheels.

Fuel supply is from an 11-gallon tank in the rear, the tank being protected by a heavy steel covering that serves as a rear cross-member of the frame.

Tires are 29x4.75, non-skid balloon cords. On the standard two-door sedan, artillery type wood wheels are used; the deluxe sedan has disc wheels.

Standard equipment for all models includes sun visor, coil-spring ignition and steering wheel lock, electric horn, radiator ornament, windshield wiper, speedometer, lock and tool. In addition, the de luxe models have mudflaps, front and rear; nickel radiator shell, automatic windshield wiper, full front bumper, quarter rear bumpers, rear view mirror and combination stop and tail light.

Both the standard and de luxe models are finished in two tones of lacquer, and have double belt molding, the lower head extending the full length of the car.

The pillars are very narrow, greatly increasing the area of glass, and giving full vision from all seats. The greatest benefit is to the driver, who has so little obstruction of vision that he will have no concern about what may be hidden from view.

Both front and rear seats are set low, and there is surprisingly ample leg room. Gearshift lever and hand brake lever are set well forward out of the way, and there is room enough in the tonneau to carry luggage without inconveniencing passengers.

A combination of an unusually wide door and a folding front seat makes possible the easy entrance or egress of passengers without disturbing those seated in the front compartment. The right-hand front seat folds forward under the dash, completely out of the way.

The windshield is of one-piece construction, adjustable for ventilation. A cowling ventilator is provided also. The windows in the doors may be lowered flush with the frames, while the side windows are can be lowered nearly to the frames; all are controlled by crank window-regulators.
