The Optical Profession

Let me confess that I take the greatest pride in my profession and that I consider the optical profession in its many phases one of the most interesting in the world—and one in which it is possible to achieve the highest ideals of service to the public.

If, after the experience of over 27 years, and after studying optometry and the wishes of the public in the leading optical centers, I were not able to offer the people of Salem better vision and better service at a reasonable price, I would consider my life work a dismal failure.

There will, fortunately, always be room for some improvement, and while I remain an optometrist I mean to bend every effort—to devote every minute of my time to searching out and overcoming any of the difficulties that lie between me and the final accomplishment of my ideal.

Please take the earliest opportunity to pay us a friendly visit. You will be always welcome.
