KELLY HELD FOR MURDER OF RAYMOND

men led to the fatal beating.

Miss Mackaye was quoted as saying she had gone to Kelly's apartment with a companion, Miss Helen Wilkinson, in the afternoon and that she remained there while the fight was taking place. In a previous statement to police she said she had left her home Saturday night to buy Easter eggs for her four year old daughter and that she visited a dressmaker.

Max Wagner, film actor and room mate of Kelly, told of the woman's visit in a statement to the district attorney. Raymond's demands that his wife break her friendship with Kelly were discussed after which Kelly called the actor on the telephone and announced he would "Settle this thing."

Dr. W. J. Sullivan of Hollywood, who attended Raymond, was among the witnesses called before the grand jury. The physician testified he had signed a death certificate stating that Raymond had died of natural causes, "nephritic coma," and Bright's disease.

MEXICAN TRAIN BANDITS SHOUTED

ered his men to kill all passengers suspected of being soldiers.

Villalobos had one leg shattered. He escaped death in the fire thru the assistance of a woman and Sergeant Isidro Anduaga, one of the three survivors of the military escort.

Sergeant Anduaga, with five soldiers, fought from the military car until his comrades were killed. Then unable to prevent the rebels from entering the car, he dropped to the floor, shamming death.

KNIVED PASSENGERS

The rebels entered and knifed the bodies. Anduaga received thrusts in the ribs and legs. Two rebels remained in the car until it was in flames. After they left, Anduaga crawled outside, met Villalobos and assited him to safety.

Sergeant Filberto Cabrera, another survivor also said a priest directed the attack from an automobile. The rebels, he added, forced the passengers to shout "long live Christ the king," killing those who did not obey promptly.

Cabrera, wounded, fled to the mountains but was captured and conducted to the rebel camp. Shortly afterward, he said, he was told: "The padre says you can go," and he returned to the scene of the disaster.

LASTED TWO HOURS

Manuel Garcia of Penjamo, a track worker, who suffered bullet wounds, said the rebels invaded the cars, stabbing all passengers whose dress indicated they might be soldiers. They robbed the passengers of clothing and valuables and afterward ordered everybody off the train. Many of the wounded were unable to get out and were burned alive.

Basilio Manin, an Italian, was slightly wounded. He claims the fight lasted over two hours and that many of the passengers were wounded because part of the military escort fought inside the cars until the rebels climbed in. Then the fight continued among the cowering passengers.

The rebels, he says, mercilessly butchered the remaining soldiers and passengers mistaken for soldiers. They did not leave until the arrival of the military train.

HOUSE BILL 72 AGAIN BEFORE

be decided here immediately so that an appeal can be taken in time for the petitioners to invoke the referendum if they prevail in the supreme court. For this reason and in view of the necessity of immediate final determination of the case, I feel justified in making a pro formo decision sustaining the demurrer. I can not take the time necessary to give this case due consideration without delaying the final determination thereof beyond that point where the petitioners could reap any advantage from a decision in their favor."

MISTRIAL ENDS SAPIRO'S SUIT

sent from the courtroom, Gallagher termed the mistrial motion "so preposterous it ought not to require an answer."

DIFFICULTY OF TRIAL

He spoke of the difficulty of trying a suit against Ford in Detroit, home of 100,000 Ford Motor company employes, who, he said, with their families, made from 200,000 to 300,000 sympathizers spreading prop aganda.

"Why, you can't get a better jury than this," he exclaimed with a wide sweep of his arms towards the but recently vacated jury box. He assailed the Ford organization and its detectives for what he said he had learned were their methods in litigation, accusing them of tapping wires, even in the rooms of judges, and seeking to influence jurors.

"It is our frank belief that the entire situation is not brought about by a desire to insure a just verdict but to secure a postponement," he challenged. "All the facts indicate that."

ACCUSES ATTORNEYS

"The affidavits do not justify the granting of such a motion."

Gallagher turned towards the Ford attorneys and shouted an accusation at them that they had "so framed the motion as to go far beyond any supporting affidavits."

He asserted that under the lawyers' hands the affidavits had become so embellished and elaborated that they made a public corridor of the postoffice building become an obscure and secluded spot.

He said that in their original form the affidavits included the sworn statement that Miller, the alleged go-between for Sapiro and Mrs. Hoffman, had handed Mrs. Hoffman a five pound box of candy and that the statement had been dropped when it was learned that the men jurors merely had paid a card game bet lost to the women as they idled away time in their retiring room during some of the long arguments at which their presence was not desired.

"If they can't tell Miller from a juror who has been in the courtroom for five weeks, how can we believe anything he says?" he demanded of Judge Raymond regarding the Ford detectives.

Hanley, the Ford counsel leader, made only a brief reply to Gallagher's address to the court.
