ROY AND RAY TELL TALE OF

ers began their barrage of questions. The interrogation continued until 7:40 p. m.

The twins were eager for the opportunity to talk until the case itself was mentioned. Then Ray looked at Roy, Roy looked at Ray. Each shook a decisive head.

"We're not crossing any bridges until we get to them," said Roy. "Better leave the case out of this."

It was while they were eating in the county jail kitchen that the twins cast aside restraint and discussed more freely the events preceding their capture.

"This'll make a good story for you if you write in properly," said Roy, who throughout the discussion inevitably prefaced his remarks with the same line. "We were witnesses in mayor's court in Scioto county in 1925.

SHOOK SHERIFF'S HAND

"Shook hands with the sheriff after the case was over, walked past a poster with our pictures on it, and got away with it.

"We were witnesses for a man who'd been shot at. He charged the other fellow with assault with intent to kill.

"Each man had the other one arrested. We testified for the plaintiff, I guess."

And then he told of an incident in Steubenville.

"I was sitting on my porch smoking," said Roy. "A Tennessee woman lived next door. She came over. " 'I wish I were a man,' she said. 'get three or four good friends and go out and rob a mail train.'

"I said 'that's very interesting—may be all right or might be all wrong. You couldn't get away with it.'

WOMAN'S TALE AMUSES

" She said three boys out in Oregon did it and got away with it. They've got their pictures up in the postoffice. They'll never catch those fellows. One of 'em stayed all night in my house two years ago."

"That was news to me," Roy continued. I asked 'which one was it?'

" 'One of the twins,' she replied.

"Why didn't you turn him over to the officers and get the reward?" I asked her.

" 'I felt sorry for him,' she said. I didn't take her seriously."

Their eyelids drooped as the twins talked. They were very tired.

Slight, slender, almost identical save a missing incisor in Ray's mouth and his peroxided hair, they talked with the same husky drawl, with the same tossed back head, with the same inflection.

"You may say for me," Ray drawled immediately following his arrival in the county jail, "that my only wish is that my mother and my father and my brothers might be spared the heartaches this case has caused. You may say that I only wish I might bear here"—and he tapped his chest "all the burden of this sorrow."

NOT ADMITTING GUILT

"Does that mean," he was asked, "that you wish you could shoulder the entire blame in the case?"

Roy stiffened somewhat.

"It does not," he shot back positively.

"It means only what I said that I wish my family might be spared the sorrow that—that is bound to —that has arisen over our arrest."

"We lived in Hanging Rock, Ohio," said Ray, as he gulped bits of egg and potatoes in the county jail kitchen. "We worked in the Hanging Rock coal and iron company.

"We made many friends in the two years we were there. Intimate friends, you understand. Friends so intimate that they undoubtedly carried with them a perfect mental picture of us. My hair was bleached, but that was not enough.

"The postoffice at Hanging Rock is small. Only a corner in a store. There was a board.

"And the only poster on that board was that of us. It was inevitable that some day some intimate of ours would look at it, and our faces would flash through his mind and then—flooey!

"So we left Hanging Rock, although we hated to.

"In Steubenville I worked in the Wheeling Steel corporation. Roy worked in the Bell mine."

Roy interrupted.

COULD NOT SEPARATE

"Yes," he said. "Three hundred feet down and back three miles. They wouldn't look for me there."

"Why didn't you fellows separate?" Roy was asked.

"We think so much of each other that we couldn't," the youth answered. "We knew they stood a better chance of catching us if we stayed together, but we just couldn't part. I guess that's where we made our mistake."

At this point Ray broke into the conversation.

"You know," he said, "they wouldn't have caught us at that, if they had given us a month longer. We had decided to stay in Ohio just two months more. The circular in the little postoffice at Hanging Rock was a constant menace to us. We had been there quite a long time and had made friends. We thought we might be recognized. We talked it over and decided to move. I didn't want to leave my wife and baby, so we decided to stay two months to give us time to prepare for moving. Three or four weeks later they caught us.

"If it hadn't been for my wife and baby we wouldn't have been caught."

NEVER TOLD WIFE

Ray's wife Hazel is now only 17 year old. She was 15 when he married her. The baby, Jackie Hugh, is about 13 months old.

"Did you ever feel like telling your wife that you and Roy were the DeAutremont twins?" Ray was asked.

"No, I never wanted to do that. You know we were getting along so happily. It would have spoiled everything to have told her. I really forgot that my real name was DeAutremont."

Ray said that he first became acquainted with his wife through her father, a timber cruiser in the Ohio hills.

"He invited me over to his house," said Ray. "One day it was raining and we were not working in the woods. I went over and met Hazel. We started to go together. We went together about three months before we were married.

"Hazel has the prettiest curls, I believe of any girl in Ohio. I am safe and conservative in saying that."

When asked where he and Ray had gone when they left Oregon for the east, Ray looked at Roy, and they debated in lowered tones.

Then Roy turned and shook his head.

SAY TREATMENT FINE

"I don't think we'll say anything about that," he said. "You see, we told the postal inspectors we would not say anything about that if they didn't want us to, and they've been awfully good to us. We won't say."

Throughout the questioning, they constantly referred to the generous treatment accorded them by their guards.

Ray resented a dispatch quoting him as saying when asked what his 17 year old wife would do, that "oh, she's good looking. She'll get along."

"She is a good girl," he said. "A really good girl. Any one would be a cad to say such a thing about her."

And Roy resented another quotation—one quoting him as saying to arresting officers that "I'd known you were coming to arrest me I'd have killed myself first."

"I have no reason to kill myself over this charge," he asserted. "An innocent man does not kill himself. He fights."
