WILD DUCK ADOPTS YOUNG DUCKLINGS
Glacier Park, Montana (AP)—What is the maximum number of ducklings a wild duck can raise?

Why bring that up? Because authorities at Glacier National Park regard the query as an "academic question"—and one that has caused endless argument for the last few days.

The argument started when Park Ranger Lawrence and Park Engineer Peters recounted observations made while on a trip to Logging Lake. There they saw a wild duck with an incredible number of ducklings.

After counting several times—a count made difficult owing to the rapidity of the youngsters' movements, the two officials, by striking an average, estimated there were 41 ducklings contentedly following Mama Duck.

The most plausible explanation advanced to date is that the Mother Duck had a decided penchant for "adoption."

"Are you through?" a woman asked.

"No," Harrington emphatically replied.

"Oh yes you are," the woman continued, standing up and explaining to the supervisors that she was Mrs. Harrington. "Hubby" sat down and his wife held the floor.

"We've been married for 32 years and he's as fine a man as you would want to see but he talks too much," she said and ripples of laughter filled the room.

"I keep him quiet when occasion demands," she continued. "That's why we get along so well."

When the supervisors controlled their laughter they put the matter over.

Book Notes
KAY CLEAVER STRAHAN
Author of "The Desert Moon Mystery"

Only the rich deserve the affliction of comfort, the inconvenience, the general bother, worry and trouble of convenience, says Kay Cleaver Strahan, whose new book, "The Desert Moon Mystery" (Doubleday Doran), makes her a close runner-up to Mary Robert Rinehart for the cold chills record of America.

And Mrs. Strahan knows whereof she speaks for she has been both blessed with primitive living and afflicted with the most modern of luxuries.

Mrs. Strahan's grandparents, all four of them, came across the plains in the early fifties and settled in Oregon. By the time young Kay was seven she had finished off in her own fashion Shakespeare, Dickens, most of Thackeray, George Eliot, Washington Irving, Scott, Hawthorne and so on.

PEDIGREE PEKINGESE PUPPIES
Ready for Delivery
Mrs. H. B. Evans, Oakley, Ore.

But it is two glorious years in Nevada that Mrs. Strahan looks back upon as a perpetual vacation. There were no houses so they lived in tents for months at a time.

"It is a marvelous emotional experience to live in tents," says Mrs. Strahan. "I learned to make an attractive living place out of two tents. I learned how to keep them cool when the thermometer was around 100 in the shade—cool and pleasant and free of flies and mosquitoes and insects. Through once, to my shame, we appeared a lively monkey on our inside rim-pole. I learned how to keep our tent warm and comfortable with the thermometer below zero, and with no firewood, except what the scrub-brush afforded. I learned how to cook a three-course dinner on a two-boled oil stove, that was an inveterate smoker. Once, I served a peach appetizer to a group of guests on a Nevada desert, sixty miles away from fresh milk, fresh fruit, purchasable ice, or one might think, possible guests. The way I did that was to learn, first, how neighborly and charming Mexican and Italian section-hands for the railroad can be.

"I learned, almost, not to be afraid of snakes, from four to six feet long, and as big around as a tea-cup, that went looping their leathery way through our front yard a hundred miles of desert. During these two years, our most pleasant living place was on the spot where the Desert Moon Ranch should have been."

As a sort of farewell party the Strahans took a long motor trip through Nevada, Utah, and Arizona, visiting Zion National Park, exploring Death Valley and having the Grand Canyon all to themselves in December when no one else was thinking of sight-seeing.

Now Mrs. Strahan is living again in Portland, trying manfully to get accustomed to the work, the convenience and general bother of a properly conducted urban household. It helps some that her home is on a hill in the midst of maples, alders and cedars, and that there is a wide view with a river and great snow covered mountains in the distance.

PATTON TIRED, BUT PLEASSED AFTER TRIP
Tired, but well pleased with his trip, Hal Patton, Oregon delegate to the national republican convention which nominated Herbert Hoover for president at Kansas City, returned to his home late Wednesday evening.

Mr. Patton was fortunate in being placed on the important credentials committee and had the opportunity of meeting and talking with many notable, including Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, Frank Lowden, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, Mabel Willebrandt, Senator Lenroot, Governor Fisher of Pennsylvania and Congressman Fort of New Jersey.

Mr. Patton is the man who threw a bombshell into the credentials committee by making a motion that the entire list of contested temporary delegates be placed on the permanent roll without lengthy argument. This was voted down and as a result the committee was in session from 4 p. m., till 4 a. m.

In order to get reservations at Kansas City hotels, the delegates were forced to sign up for five days, says Mr. Patton. The room rates were generally boosted, delegates paying from $10 to $18 per day, while the Oregon delegates were charged $75 each for rooms that occupied five days. Mr. Patton highly praises the hospitality of the Kansas City people. A great many of the delegates were invited to and entertained in Kansas City homes.

The convention was so well organized that it could have adjourned within three days, in the opinion of Mr. Patton, but in order to give the Kansas City people a chance to get back some of the $150,000 they put up to secure the convention, the lid was taken off and everybody that had anything to say was given an opportunity.

On his return Mr. Patton stopped off at Colorado Springs and Salt Lake City.
