

LINN OFFICERS SOLVE CRIMES IN GANG RAID

Albany—With the arrest of Frank Butler, 34, Corvallis; Sid Smith, 21; Corvallis, and Clarence Backus, Alaskan Indian on a bootlegging charge, Sheriff Herbert Shelton and Deputy Sheriff W. H. McClain, believe they have uncovered one of the best organized gangs of motor truck thieves in the state.

Smith and Backus were arrested last week on the Sharp farm near Knox Butte for operating an unlicensed still and at the farm the officers found large quantities of groceries, men's clothing and sets of work harness. Becoming suspicious they offered to bring the groceries to Albany for the men to eat while in jail, but the two men didn't want to bring the groceries, confirming the authorities' suspicions.

Discovery of the loot led the officers to believe that it might be the loot taken a few days ago from two stores at Stayton and they started an investigation. The Stayton merchants came to Albany and at once identified the goods as theirs. Among it were the bacon, hams, 75 pounds of oleomargarine, eggs, canned goods and men's clothing. Butler's truck stored on the Sharp farm, afforded the clue that connected Butler with the crime. Immediately the officers swore out a warrant for his arrest and he was arrested by the Benton county sheriff and brought to Albany. All three men were kept apart and little by little the story of the crimes was told.

Butler is said to have taken full responsibility for the thefts and it is believed that they have uncovered a notorious band of thieves, who have been carrying on their thievery in Linn, Lane, and Marion counties. Smith and Backus told the officers they were Butler's hired men and were employed to make "moonshine whiskey," they were in the act of running off 650 gallons of mash in a 50 gallon copper still, when the officers apprehended them. The arrest of Butler has cleared up numerous crimes in the three counties.
