Potos by Gunnell & Rodd

Mothers and children have particular interest at Christmas-tide, and pictured above are some of the younger matrons of the city with their children. Reading from left to right: Mrs. William Gosser and her young son, Claybourne; Mrs. Fritz Slade and her twin boys, Fred and Colin, and infant son, Roderick; and Mrs. Foster Cone and two-year-old son, Latham.

The long festoons of evergreens swinging in the winds on the downtown streets, the glittering decorations in the stores and shop windows, the lighting of the state capitol community Christmas tree on the court house lawn and the wreaths of holly and baskets of poinsettas have emphasized the fact that Christmas is coming, and now it is but four days away.

Social circles too, have shown the unmistakable influence of the gay holiday season, for the bright scarlet and green, traditional colors of the Yuletide, lend themselves admirably to luncheon and dinner tables and the pretty Christmas trees form delightful centers of interest at informal social evenings.

Maids and matrons have been too busy with shopping, tying up intriguing packages in silver, tissue and ribbon, and in mailing and receiving cards and in decorating their own homes to have much time to devote to parties and entertainments this past week. Several interesting club affairs have been given, and a number of smaller parties have been held, but with the exception of the dancing clubs on Tuesda yand Friday, the week has been lacking in major social functions.

One bride who has attracted much attention through her wide acquaintanceship was Mrs. Richard Wenrick Newman (Jean Shipp) whose marriage was quietly solemnized at high noon Friday in the parlors of the First Presbyterain church.

The younger set has come home from colleges and universities, and with the addition of the high school maids and beaus, are planning a gay whirl of affairs during the next two weeks. Dances, teas, bridge parties and informal affairs promise enough entertainment for the young folks to keep their parents wondering if they will ever have a chance for an informal chat with their children while they are home for the fortnight.

The programs Sunday evening at the various churches, and the midnight ceremonies Christmas Eve are attracting much attention throughout the city. With the exception of church programs, the functions for the younger folk, the forepart of the week will be quiet and simple family dinners will mark the most interesting holiday of the year.
