PUBLIC WORK IS ESTIMATED AT $29,500,000

Governor Norblad telegraphed Secretary of Commerce R. P. Lamont Friday that about $29,500,000 will be expended in Oregon during 1930 on public works.

The telegram was Oregon's response to President Hoover's move to ascertain the amount of public work that would be done in the nation during the year, and urging that as many projects as possible be put under way. The gathering of the Oregon data was begun by the late Governor Patterson.

It is estimated, according to Norblad's telegram, that $10,500,000 will be expended by the state, $10,000,000 by the counties and $9,000,000 by cities and other municipalities.

Of the amount to be spent by counties it is estimated that $6,273,044 will be to road building, while road repair and maintenance will require $764,240 more. The bridge building estimate is put at $2,428,900. Other county items are $111,475 for bridge repair, $200,500 for public buildings and $18,200 for miscellaneous construction.

Under the heading of municipal works steel construction is placed at $2,590,300, street betterments and maintenance $535,650, bridge construction $321,700, bridge repairs, $31,250, public buildings $2,197,940, improvements to public buildings $5,135, hazards, sewage disposal, water systems, electric systems and schools $3,346,206.

Most of the state's estimated expenditure of $10,500,000 will go to highways and bridges, and park acquisition.

Data was requested from 192 cities and towns and 77 repled. The data has been collected by Sam A. Koser, budget director, who will continue to assemble data.
