Political Interest in Polk Finds Focus in Contest for Attorney

Dallas—Reconciled to the uncertainty of the republican contest for the nomination for governor, the principal controversy in the present primary election campaign, and seemingly not greatly concerned as to the outcome, Polk county voters are evidencing an apathy toward politics that refuses to be shaken by the near approach of election day.

For first honors for governor it is indicated that county republicans will split their votes fairly evenly between Senator Corbett and Governor Norblad with George Joseph, who has evidenced considerable strength in certain of the rural districts, expected to make a strong bid for third place.

Both Corbett and Norblad followers are claiming first honors in the county for their candidates, but the more impartial observers concede to Corbett slight apparent edge.

Attracting perhaps more interest in the country generally than the gubernatorial contest is the three-cornered race for the republican nomination for district attorney, in which three ex-service men are the participants. Few of the dopesters concede any chance to the opponents of Robert Krasson, Dallas attorney and an active leader in legion affairs and activities. Oscar Hayter has been associated with Krasson in the practice of law here for several years and through this means of contact has built up a circle of ardent friends extending into all corners of the county. His political contacts, likewise, have been much broader than those of his associates by reason of his affiliation with the republican organization in the last presidential and other recent campaigns.

Offers to water even money that Krasson will poll a vote equal to the combined vote of his two opponents are branded as being unreasonable by Krasson's closest friends, but they forecast for him a plurality in excess of 500.

Krasson's opponents are Elmer Barnhart of Independence and Elmer D. Cook of West Salem. Barnhart's strength appears to be largely confined to the Independence and Falls City sections and Cook's to West Salem and a few other precincts in the eastern part of the county. Krasson's managers claim all of the precincts west of the West Side highway by substantial leads.

Some little interest is being evidenced in the campaign for the republican nomination for state representative from the eleventh district in which S. L. Stewart, incumbent, and Edward K. Piasocki are competing. Piasocki, former district attorney here but now devoting most of his time to the practice of law in Salem, is being compelled to face the criticism that he is more closely affiliated with Salem and Marion county than with Polk, although he makes his home in the Kingswood district back of West Salem and still maintains a law office in Dallas.

By understood rotation the joint legislative seat for the district comprising Polk and Lincoln counties goes this year to the coast county and of the four candidates from that county, James J. Wolfe, Elmer S. McCormick, L. D. Nash and Don Avery, little audible expression of choice is heard among the voters here.
