SALEM YOUTH

WRITING BOOK

Balem boasts a youthful, self-in-tructed naturalist who is making a niche for himself among sfren-tille men in the Pacific northwest. Elimer Lowell Griepentrog, 21. is one engaged in writing a book de-voted to botanical definitions, to be ultustrated with 250 woodcuts, for which he is making the drawings, and a small group of photographs. Griepentrog has had no other in-struction that his own and what he could piek up out of text books for his own work. He has always had a bent toward the occupa-tion, and since a mere boy has collected and classified numerous upeciments of plants, insects, birds and mammals. The young man has an exhibit of approximately 2,000 specimens in he United States national museum eviewed many appreciative letters from national scientists on the col-lection. It includes a number of extremely rare apecimens, including a figing squirrel uncommon in the valley, and the nest of a sharpshin hawk, the only authentic record of a sharpshin hawk nesting in Ore-m.

a sharpshin hawk nesting in Ore-gon. Griepentrog has just collected and shipped an exhibit of life history of insects for the Washington state museum. He has other exhibits in the Park Museum at Los Angeles, and the University of Michigan. All of his exhibits were collected in Oregon, and almost exclusively in the Willamette valley and the Cas-cade mountains. Griepentrog is the author of num-erous articles in national scientific magazines. The book he is now en-agged upon is his first. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Criep-entrog, who lives on Loute 5 east of Salem on the Center atreet road

An order has been entered by the county court cancelling the viewers report on the Detroit-Whitewater proposed county road and calling for a new viewing of the road. This is due to a few changes made in the grade going out of Detroit which were approved by the government surveyors after the court had held some conferences with protesting property owners to that section. While the time had clapsed for property owners to make objections and the court could have legally gone ahead and put the road over on the original location because no objections were filed, members of the court figured they were morally bound to call for a new viewers re-

RUMORED MEIER TO BUILD MANSION

IU DUILU MARSIUM Ggesip on the streets of Salem Moniday morning was to the effect that Julius Meier had tipped off friends that if it was in the cards he was to finally become governor one of his plans is to construct a $30,000 governor's mansion here for his home during his stay in Salem and that his eventual design was when he left the guberatorial of-lice to deed the same to the state as a permanent sfit to the state and to Salem. No matter whether there was any truth at the foundation of the trumor it stirred up quite a bit of tak among the State street pol-ticians. As an inferesting sidelight it was recalled that a time or two the old Patton home and properly on Court street near the capitol had been put up for sale to the state as the prospective atte for a gov-ernor's mansion. No legislature was ever convinced that it should be bought. Hal Patton, one of the owners, always has been active in politics, was a strong Norbial sup-porter before the primities, and the local guessers were guessing as to how such a report presumbaly em-
