

SALEM SCHOOLS VIOLATE LAW IN CHOOSING BOOKS

Although Oregon has a textbook commission of four to recommend books for use in elementary and high schools, many local school officials prefer to make their own selections of some texts, it was learned here.

The Oregon school law requires the "use in public schools of such books as shall be adopted by the state textbook commission," leaving principals of districts of the first class the sole right to choose additional texts to those "already authorized" by the state.

Those who sponsored the law did so with a view to saving unnecessary expenditure of funds for texts should a family move from one district to another. A standardized course of study also would save children from handicaps in case a change of residence was made, it was held.

Proof that principals are not regarding the authorized state school list in the choice of books for study was found in comparative book lists of the Salem elementary and high schools and those of the state textbook commission. In nearly every grade some deviation in the books recommended and the books used, is evident. Although many of the recommended books are included in the courses of study, many authorized volumes of the commission, adaptable to certain courses, have been ignored and supplementary books, the choice of local officials, have been included.

When it is considered that each school child must provide himself with books costing from $1.50 in the primary grades to $10 and $15 in higher grades and high school classes, only to have the expensive volumes rendered obsolete upon removal to another district, the proposal of state manufacture of texts becomes more significant to Oregon taxpayers, it was said.

CHURCH WILL OFFER RALLY DAY SERVICE

Legislative Vacancy Amendment Placed On Election Ballot

If the cost of electing a state legislator is of sufficient importance to Oregon taxpayers to warrant remedial legislation, then J. E. Bennett of Portland believes citizens should vote "yes" on official ballot number 310.

Bennett was sponsor of the amendment which would amend the constitution of Oregon to authorize the filling of such vacancies in the legislature in such a manner as may be provided by law.

This means the law which calls for a special election to fill a vacant seat, would be supplanted by a law providing that a group of committeemen of the party of the retiring legislator would choose the successor. "The substitute would serve until the next regular or special election."

Present laws authorize the governor to issue a writ of special election upon creation of a vacancy in either house. Such measures call for expenditure of funds solely to provide a succeeding legislator. State history reveals this provision has been used only once in filling such a vacancy. This happened in 1915 during the term of Governor West. A Douglas vacancy occurred and a special election was called wherein a successor was chosen. The first woman senator attended the next regular session.

Bennett claims he framed the law in the hope it might save what he considered unnecessary drain on the finances of the district to which such an unlucky occurrence might fall.

State records of the past ten years reveal that three senators were missing at the roll call of special or regular sessions. None was provided with a substitute.

In the case of a Multnomah county senator, William T. Hume, considerable controversy was waged because a successor was not found. It was held the county was at a disadvantage in securing pending legislation because one representative was absent.

Hume was elected for the regular session of 1921, which he attended. In October of the same year he died and in December a special session was called. Only in 1922 was Harry Corbett chosen in regular election to succeed him.

W. A. Dimmick of Clackamas county also was elected to the regular session of 1919 and 1921. He died following the regular session and when a special election was called in 1920 his seat remained unfilled.

A Lane senator, I. Bingham, missed the entire session when he was called east. No effort was made to fill his seat.

But such occurrences might appear more often in the future and unlucky counties might be forced by a conscientious governor to call special elections to provide the traditional chambers with a complete roster. Bennett maintains.

In proof that Bennett's proposal is the only solution for providing permanently complete rolls in both houses without the expense of special election, an opinion of September 15, 1929, by I. H. Van Winkle, attorney general, was cited. It was requested by Bennett.

According to Van Winkle, the governor is not authorized by state law to fill legislative vacancies. The code requires, as Van Winkle quoted, "that he, (the governor) shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies as may have occurred in legislative assembly."

Amendment of this law to give the governor power to appoint succeeding legislators would invest too

LAKE COUNTY GETS NEW WORK ON HIGHWAYS

With the award of contracts for the grading of a 13.5 mile unit of Fremont highway, between Silver Lake and Picture Rock pass in Lake county, the entire 150 miles of that highway will be graded or under grading contract except five miles of county road over the pass.

Fremont highway extends from a junction with The Dalles-California highway 1.8 miles south of La Pine in a southeasterly direction through Klamath and Lake counties to Lakeview and the California line. It extends through a region that was explored by General John C. Fremont and still carries the names given by the frontier soldier. It passes along Silver Lake, now dry, and Summer Lake, an alkali body of water that has become reduced in size during recent dry years. In Lake county the highway passes through the towns of Paisley and Silver Lake. Picture Rock pass was so named because of the Indian hieroglyphics still seen on the rocks.

A stretch of 10.2 miles of the highway is in Fremont national forest through which the road has been constructed with federal funds. Much power in the executive, it is held by many. Even federal statutes allow him to make appointments only to fill house positions in congress, senate vacancies to be left for special or regular elections, it was shown.

By allowing "county or district central committeemen of the party of the retiring member to select his successor in assembly," much in the same manner as other state officials are chosen under similar circumstances, Bennett believes the law he so enthusiastically advocates to be the only means of saving money to Oregon taxpayers in event of such occurrences in future years. Also districts could be assured they might have their full share of representation in all sessions.
