

OLD ALASKAN FINDS VALLEY CLIMATE COLD

A person might think that a man who has spent 23 of his 65 years in a country where the residents do not admit a day is "cold" until after the mercury drops to the 40 degree below zero mark would find the climate of the Willamette valley ideal. But O. B. Hubbard, of Fairbanks, Alaska and a native son of Marion county, finds himself shivering and complaining of the "cold" here after he becomes acclimated. Hubbard is spending the winter in the states and is at present on his first visit in Salem in four years.

Since his last visit here both his parents, his late wife and Mrs. W. C. Hubbard and several of his brothers and other relatives have died. He and a sister, Mrs. Joe Gruber, are the surviving members of the old Hubbard family of seven children. Hubbard's station was named for his grandfather and all of the original members of the pioneer family have been called "Hubbard." Mr. B. Kerster, who still has a chicken ranch in the section, and who attended the Eldridge school north of Salem, spending his youth on his father's farm in the Madison Bottom district. A trip to Portland was an event then. He recalls, for before the Southern Pacific was constructed it took two days by wagon to make the trip from Hubbard by way of "Danlain" and the Horse Ferry.

Hubbard, and within a radius of 40 miles, has just completed its most prosperous season since the war, Hubbard says. There has been lots of rain and employment. Mining activities today are being carried on by dredges and hydraulic processes with one concern building 70 miles of ditch for its water. A road train arrives every week and supplies can be obtained within ten or 12 days after the telegraphing whereas when he first entered the country it took weeks and supplies were purchased late in the summer to last through the winter as the river freezes over about the middle of October and with the ice going out is not navigable until June.

Airplane transportation is increasing but is still very expensive, but business against time and distance, the expense is not exorbitant. It is possible to fly in five hours a distance that it used to take a dog team seven weeks to cover. A good dog team, Hubbard says, can make 40 miles a day. Men are still making and losing money at mining ventures, with approximately $1000 needed to outfit a miner for the season, including dogs and supplies. This average mining season is about five months, the remainder being winter. The interior is colder than the coast but does not have the heavy snows. Temperatures range from 40 to 60 degrees below zero in the interior but four or five feet of snow are exceptional. The coast has snowfalls of from eight to ten feet.

Hubbard will spend the winter here and in California and about to return to Alaska in the spring as soon as river transportation is resumed.

LEAGUE SEEKS TO POPULARIZE DRY REGIME

Washington (AP)—City by city the anti-saloon league is undertaking the enactment of high-standing business men in a campaign to popularize prohibition.

The objective, as described by F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the league, is to tell by newspapers, magazines, radio and motion pictures what it considers the merits of prohibition, without overlooking a resume of unfavorable conditions in the saloon days.

The extent of this campaign was outlined by McBride soon after Prohibition Director Woodcock had made known his approval of the proposition in St. Louis of a merchant who sold grape juice which turned into wine.

But Woodcock explicitly said the case was not a precedent for wholesale rounding up of grape juice sellers, so the problem of just how to regard the widespread sale of an innocent beverage destined to acquire illegal potency remained very much up in the air.

The puzzle was enlarged by recent reports gangsters had threatened death to juice men if they invaded their beer barons, and the apparently well authenticated information the California grape growers had appealed to the department of justice for protection under laws which forbid restraint of interstate commerce. No one in the department so far has confirmed this information, however.

ALL DAY FARM MEET IS EVENT AT AMITY

Amity—An all-day farm meeting was held here Wednesday in the W. O. W. hall. The farmers' organizations represented were the farmers' union, the grange, the Jersey Cattle Breeders association, and the Dairyman's Cooperative association. The dairyman occupied the time in the forenoon and a round-table discussion issued. Walter Russell, a former representative from Yamhill county, presided. A basket dinner was served in the hall at noon and a social hour held.

In the afternoon the Farmers' union held a meeting. Numerous speeches were made. R. W. Clark of Salem who is a director of the Dairyman's association, spoke of the advantages of cooperating and Roger Moore of the O. A. C. dairy department and Senator Joe Dunn, were also on the program and gave instructive talks. S. A. White, county agent, presided in the afternoon. This meeting was one of a series of six farm meetings to be held in Yamhill county during the week.
