Boy's Mistake In Identity is Fatal to Fowl

Jefferson—As the old saying goes, Hap Blackwell's "goose was cooked," or nearly so, Wednesday when Elmer and Harold Knight shot what they thought was a wild goose on the river near Knight's residence in Jefferson.

Blackwell, the proprietor of Camp Santiam, directly across the river, had attended a shooting match a few days previous, and won a goose which he penned up to fatten for a future dinner, but the goose had a wandering spirit, and craving a swim in the nearby Santiam, got out of the pen and made a beeline for the river, swimming to the opposite bank. The Knight boys discovered the fowl swimming along the bank, and grabbing their trusty guns, enjoyed the exciting sport of killing a "wild" goose.

As soon as Blackwell discovered the empty pen, he began a search and arrived at the river bank just in time to witness the end of said goose, the shot flying in such close proximity that he was forced to take refuge behind a tree.

Later, on interviewing the Knights he found that the goose had been neatly picked and dressed by Elmer, who respectfully surrendered it to its rightful owner.
