WOODEN CORES, NEW INDUSTRY, PROGRESS SEEN

Dallas—What might well be termed the infant industry of this city is being operated at the present time by Randall Buell. The product is small wooden cores such as are used in adding machine paper rolls and others of a similar nature. The bulk of the output is absorbed meanwhile by the Western Paper Converting Co. of Salem but hopes are entertained that the market will expand considerably in the future making for a greater production and the installation of more machines.

The story of the plant is interesting. It first came into being at Nashville about two and a half years ago for the purpose of manufacturing core ends for the large size of paper rolls being more or less of a rougher finish. Local conditions impelled Buell who by the way not only invented the machine but also built it, to transfer his activities to Dallas where conditions appeared more favorable for his purpose. After a great deal of experimenting numerous changes were made which enabled the machine to turn out a different class of core and of a much better grade with a range of different sizes.

The factory is located at the foot of Mill street immediately adjacent to the J. J. Wicks planing mill. From the rough lumber to the finished product is a matter of seconds. Elder boards are first ripped to the required dimensions by a circular saw and then placed in the "feed" for the core machine. As the strip moves into the machine it is sized and turned, to drop in a lateral direction and out. As it withdraws a small circular saw cuts off a piece the required length, an arm moves the piece forward, to where it is sized and turned, to drop in a lateral direction in a container placed to receive the finished article.

Production varies according to the size of the core bit; for adding machine rolls it runs as high as eight thousand in eight hours. Buell is working on a similar machine, which will turn out reels for thread in the same efficient and speedy manner. A visit will prove both interesting and instructive.

NELSON OFFERS TEACHERS PLAN ON TEXT BOOKS

Suggestions for aiding their pupils to secure books with a view to reducing the financial burden have been made by Principal Emeritus J. C. Nelson, head of the history department at the high school, to his history department teachers.

In the American history 3A class, where the textbook has been changed and the books have a retail price value of $2.12, Mr. Nelson has made three suggestions: First, that teachers either dispense with the book entirely and present the material direct to the class with the pupils taking notes and preserving them in organized form, supplemented by library books; second, that the first course suggested might be modified by collecting and keeping in the room enough copies of last year's text to accommodate each pupil so that the whole burden of presenting the subject would not fall on the teacher but after presenting a general outline, he would allow the pupils to take the text and study it for themselves; third, the plan presented by Miss Mabel Robertson, principal, that a rental fee sufficient to buy enough books for the use of the largest class be collected from the pupils with the books considered as common property, the smaller classes sharing in the expense of the books and using them also.

In American history 4A and in European history 2 and 4 the pupils will use the same texts during the year. In European history 1 and 3, it is advocated by Mr. Nelson that students endeavor to secure their books through the used-book exchange at the high school and that all students no longer using history books place them for sale on the exchange. Students who desire to buy their own new books or students who wish to donate books to the history department will, of course, be encouraged to do so.

The history department is the first department in the high school to take a decisive step in solving the text book problem this year, although the English department has had a rental system in several classes. It is considered probable that other departments in the school will follow the suggestions made by Mr. Nelson, although that is up to the department heads and students. Free text books are not required by law in the high school.

HORSESHOE TOURNAMENT ALLURING TO MINTO

Chief of Police Frank Minto lays claim to being one of the most skillful horseshoe pitchers, not only in Salem but in the whole state, and he is going to show his stuff during the state fair week, thinks he will go after the state title in the tournament to be held as one of the new and most thrilling features of the fair.

Chief Minto demonstrated his ability with the horseshoes while at Newport recently on a vacation. In a series of games there he defeated his opponent to information reaching Salem. Frank admitted this when queried, though apparently he was trying to keep the matter dark so that he might spring a surprise on whoever he draws as opponents in the state tournament.

The chief's opponent at Newport was Mrs. Mabel Cooper, who, incidentally is Frank's cousin. Although Minto was cautious at first about letting out any information about what he did at Newport, the chief suddenly warmed at the recollection and declared:

"I could have beaten a woman twice as big as she is."

Spaulding Criticises Highway Board for Delaying Program

Failure to hold a state highway commission meeting, which had been tentatively scheduled for Thursday, thus resulting in delay in selecting a route or routes of the highway from Portland to the sea, was criticized by Charles K. Spaulding, a member of the commission, in a statement given out here Thursday night. Spaulding had been informed the meeting was to have been held, and during the day he said he spent some time to ascertain if the session would be called and reasons for the delay.

No definite date had been set for the hearing, it was announced by the state highway department, although it was tentatively planned to hold the meeting this week for consideration of the route from Portland to the sea.

The commission, it was stated, is demanding that at least one of these highways be constructed during the coming fall and winter. If the highway commission is to comply with this demand further dilatory tactics should be avoided.

Spaulding declared that he had considered carefully the several routes suggested and was ready to approve the Vernonia-Hamlet and Wilson-River roads.

"The construction of these two highways would distribute the traffic from Portland to the sea," Spaulding said, "and at the same time open up and make accessible a rich farming area."

Spaulding intimated that under his plan at least one of the highways would be constructed by the state. The second highway would probably be designated as a forest road.

Officers identified the dead men as Hardy Lane, 45; Bill Fish, 38, Boyd's station, and Early Sullivan, 28. Physicians said they did not expect Bill Sullivan, brother of Early Sullivan and brother-in-law of Fish to live. All were filling station operators.

One pistol bullet fractured Boyd's right arm. Another plucked a furrow across his chest.

Boyd said two of the men came to his station, 13 miles from Atlanta, to hold a motor car which they were riding had developed trouble and asked him to tow them in. He said when he drove up behind the machine one of the group forced him with a shotgun to enter their car.

Boyd told officers he liberated one arm and opened fire after he was struck over the head. Two of the four slumped on the seat. A bullet tore into his right arm, disabling it. He said he shifted the pistol into his left hand and fired two more shots. Officers said Boyd fired but four shots.

The Sullivan brothers lived near Vivian, La. Lane operated a gasoline station just over the Louisiana line in Texas. Both Boyd and Fish operated stations in Louisiana. The motive of the alleged attack was not made clear.

Kennett Project Is Thought Feasible

Redding, Cal. (AP)—Brigadier General Herbert Dealyne, chief of the army board of engineers, gathering data for a report to congress which will decide whether federal financial aid will be given the coordinated water program, said Friday he believed a dam and power plant at Kennett was practical and feasible.

The party stopped here overnight after inspecting the proposed site Thursday. The group will go to Grants Pass, Ore., Eureka and San Francisco.

Dealyne declined to compare the Kennett and Iron canyon sites but said feasibility of a dam project in Iron canyon would depend on underground strata on which the foundations would rest. State engineers have been quoted as saying these are not sufficient.

NEW TEACHERS MEET FACULTY ON SATURDAY

Six teachers will be introduced to the Salem public school system for the first time Saturday forenoon, when all teachers will meet at 10 o'clock in the high school assembly room for final instructions before the opening of the public school Monday morning.

The six new teachers are: Martin Elle, science instructor at the high school; Floyd Swanson, mechanical drawing and history instructor at Leslie junior high school; Mary Cupper, home economics teacher at Parrish junior high school; Dora Wallace, 2A-3B teacher at Englewood; Roseanne Schroeder, 2A-3C teacher at Garfield, and Grace Fallon, first grade teacher at Lincoln.

Several teachers are being assigned to different schools than where they taught last year. Joy Hills, supervisor of social science, has been changed from Parrish to Leslie but will continue as head of the department and supervisor of her particular subject. In the grades, Enid Dotson has been changed from Englewood to Richmond; Vivian Esfridge and Grace Geibel, who taught at Garfield last year, have been assigned to Park school for the coming year; Florence Stewart has been changed from Park to Garfield and Mildred Wyatt, also of Park school, has been assigned to Lincoln for the coming year; and Laura B. Eaton of last year's Richmond school faculty, will be at Englewood during the coming year. In almost all cases, the changes are made at the teacher's own request.

The entire faculty group, together with all supervisors, principals and the city school superintendent will meet Saturday morning at the high school. Superintendent George W. Hug will speak and deliver instructions. The teachers will meet by departments and schools for conferences with their heads of departments. Grade school teachers will be dismissed until the afternoon, when they will meet with their principals at their respective school buildings.

The first class will start next Wednesday night at 7 o'clock in the home economics room in the high school building, and will consist of a course of 18 hours, each lesson taking about two and a half hours or three hours. Securing a local woman to result in a reduction of the fee, according to T. T. Mackenzie, vocational instructor, who is in charge of the classes. The cost of the course will not be over two dollars and will be lower if more people register.

HIGH STREET LIGHT DISTRICT PROPOSED

The lighting amendment will provide that property owners desiring to form a district shall petition the city council. If any of the property owners are opposed they would have the right to present a remonstrating petition. The petition for the district would describe the type of lights desired. The council would refer the petition to the city planning and zoning commission for approval as to type, the object in this being to preserve uniformity or system in the type of lights used in the city.

Regarding the number of signers on a petition, and regarding whether there were any remonstrating property owners, the city council would in the end have the right to do as it pleased about granting the district. In this the plan would differ from street improvements, for in the paving of streets it is mandatory that the council approve if a majority of the property is represented on the petition.

A district, according to the proposed act, might be only one side of a street in a single block or it might be both sides of the street in any number of blocks. The property benefitted would be bonded under the general lien dockets of the city, the assessments payable in yearly increments along with the annual bond issue plan works. Bonds would be issued and become general obligations of the city, their security being the property within the lighting district. The council would be required to advertise in a local newspaper for five days its intention to organize a district and make the petitioned improvement.

It is explained that in voting for the measure the voter will not be voting to add a further burden to the taxpayers in general, but will only be voting to authorize the property owners in the proposed district to pay for the lighting of their streets.
