The Siberian A. E. F.

The veil of mystery that has always cloaked the American expeditionary force to Siberia has been partially rent by the publication in book form of the suppressed report of Major General William S. Graves, its commander, under his signature. It tells a story of Japanese conspiring against and sometimes even murdering American troops and of the state department at vigorous odds with the war department in warring against the Bolshevik regime. The book contains a foreword by Newton D. Baker, then secretary of war, substantiating Graves.

General Graves, who retired voluntarily in 1928 after an army career of 40 years, charges the state department with being party to a plan to place rifles in the hands of the White Russian troops, which were using these same rifles against American forces. The state department had conspired with France and Great Britain to bring about the overthrow of the Soviet regime, General Graves states, which was also the object of the Japanese, and this, rather than aid for the Czech legion making its escape from Russia, was the sole purpose of the Siberian invasion by Americans, although the United States was not at war with Russia. The White Russians, he states, never had a chance and he praises the conduct of the Bolsheviks.

General Graves accuses the state department of deliberately coloring the news it gave out regarding the Siberian situation and tells of reprimands sent its employees "for not sending out the kind of information out of Siberia we want you to send." By refusing to give consideration to army reports, the state department "did not know of the modern methods being used by our ally, Japan in destroying Bolshevism and its representatives joined whole heartedly in the fight for Kolchak."

Specific instances are cited of the arrest of American officers by Kolchak in the presence of Japanese troops and the official notification that the Japanese would not permit the Americans to attack the Cossacks in order to free the captives, and the threat to open fire on the Americans if they did, the Japanese joining the Cossacks in their trenches. An engagement was only averted by the transfer of the prisoners to another city.

The disclosures in the book reveal a shameful chapter in American diplomacy and it is little wonder the state department suppressed the report.

Silver Falls Park

The state highway commission has authorized the purchase of the large south falls for the recently acquired Silver creek falls park, together with 100 acres of camp ground and timber for $10,000. Thus through cooperation of the federal government, Marion county and the highway commission, the long visioned preservation of the most scenic asset of the entire valley becomes a reality as a state park. The federal government relinquished the public land to the county, and the county transferred it to the state, which has now purchased the private holdings, to complete the project.

On motion of Commissioner Spaulding, trails will be built through the park to make its scenic beauties easily visited and provide winter work for the unemployed. Market road construction has already made the park accessible to the autoist.

It will now be up to Salem, Silverton and other cities to exploit the park as a scenic attraction by advertising it as a mecca for sightseers and thus induce the tourist to linger longer. No time should be lost in spreading the fame of its natural beauty.

Rebating an Illegal Tax

Refusal of the United States supreme court to review the appeal of the state tax commission, thus confirming the decision of Oregon supreme court holding the 1929 intangibles tax law invalid, automatically forces the refunding of the money collected, some $895,000 out of a total of $935,000.

The money should have been refunded when the law was declared invalid, as promised by the tax commission. However the legislature voted for an appeal, thus holding in state coffers money belonging to taxpayers. The legislature is always ready to break faith with the taxpayer.

The decision does not affect the present intangibles tax, which was made 8 percent instead of 5 percent on incomes derived from securities, in reprisal against the many for the action of a few in contesting the validity of the law. The 1931 law was drafted to comply with the supreme court ruling. Whether it does or not, is yet to be determined.

While the state in its present financial condition can ill afford to reimburse the taxpayers, most of the taxpayers' finances are in equally poor condition and individuals need the rebate as badly as the state. There is going to be a woe falling off in income taxation of all kinds paid for the year 3 of Lord Hoover.

MICKEY MOUSE BIRTHDAY HAS COMEDY FILMS

Plans for a big birthday party for the Mickey Mouse club, to be held at the Warner Bros. Elmore theater Saturday morning, are being completed by Manager Earl Rice, and every club member who attends will be given a real treat—candy, cake and probably ice cream. Membership in the club is free of charge to youngsters under 14 years old and as only club members will be eligible to receive the treat, Manager Rice suggests that non-members enroll at once. There is no charge for membership, he states. A special all-comedy program has been arranged by Manager Rice, including the feature offering.

The midnight matinee proved such a popular feature Saturday night that it will be repeated again this week. The movie will be "Five Star Final," a newspaper offering, which opens Sunday.

Will Rogers is being featured at the Warner Bros. Elmore theater in "Young as You Feel," and will be here through Tuesday night. Gloria Swanson, in "Indiscreet," opens for two days Wednesday. This is one of the latest releases from the United Artists studios. This is a modern story, original, from the pens of DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, the trio of famous song writers who are also the producers of the film. Ben Lyon takes the title male role.

"Secrets of a Secretary," another triumph for Claudette Colbert, the charming girl of "Manila" and the "Smiling Lieutenant," opens for a two-day engagement at the Warner Bros. Capitol theater Wednesday. The story deals with a society girl who loses a fortune but gains love. Georgia Metaxas, one-time musical member of the royal cabinet of Rumania and later idol of the London musical stage, makes his American debut with the charming Colbert in this picture. Richard Barthelmess, in "The Last Flight," is seen for the last time Tuesday at the Capitol theater.

Doris Blake Says:

Husband Thinks Hunting Job for Wife Is Work Enough for Him

What would you, as a wife, do in a case like this? The woman, nearly 40, has a husband who prefers that she go out to work rather than have her stay home and attend to the housework. She did work until last February in a department store. She found out that while she was on her job her husband wasn't on his as an insurance salesman. He stayed home most of the day playing the radio or sleeping. He complained that business was too rotten to pursue it. The woman turned her full time energies finally into the home work, washing, scrubbing, pressing hubby's trousers, mending, cooking, and so on. Everything to save a dollar. There are no children.

The man doesn't ask the woman directly to go out to work, but he looks in the papers for a job that would be suitable for her and reads the ads aloud.

The man is good enough to the woman in most ways. She doesn't want to go back to work. She doesn't want fighting and arguing. She would do anything to make the man happy. But she wants him to realize that he is not single any longer, and that his job is supplying the income if she is willing to take over the other end of the partnership conscientiously.

To get an honest appraisal of the situation one must be able to consider depression is responsible for the man's lethargy. It's not the moment for harsh judgment. It's a time during which wives are called upon to show a courage which has not been expected of them in a long time, even to going out into the business world, if need be. There are men, supposedly engaged in occupations at the moment, who simply cannot get business. They cannot earn enough to pay the rent. They get discouraged and perhaps lose heart to go after anything at all.

However, the wife knows her man best. She knows whether there is a natural disinclination to work or not. If the man is lazily inclined then her best bet is to build to her housewife job and insist that he take care of the other end.

Antoinette's Beauty Talks

Bleaching Brings Medium Tans Back to a Normal Color

I still note a good deal of the summer tan about on faces that give a clue to a short outdoor season. We hear from those headquarters from which we follow orders lamblike that the Samoan tones of complexion are distinctly on the out and out. That they don't subscribe to the new order of female on the 1932 calendar. Yet some of these girls with their early Indian and late Tahiti tinting do look pretty stunning, providing they strike just the proper color note in dress.

One blond met up with in a recent day's tour was brown as the proverbial chestnut. Her frock was a gorgeous golden shade, a few degrees lighter than her tanned skin. Her eyes were huge brown ones. Had she gone Victorian pale she probably would never have been noticed in the crowd. So I don't think it's wise to take those headquarters orders too personally. Not if you feel you know your style better than does any one else.

But in the in-between stages where the tan is neither this or that and where it doesn't set one apart flatteringly there will have to be a period of bleaching to catch up with the group this type had best associate with—the back to normal group. Meanwhile the powder and rouge may be made to serve as a coverall for the tint that glows not, neither does it spin any tall praise.

It may mean a complete change in cosmetic color scheme. That is, the shades that went all right with the lightweight, pastel or white summer things may not serve with the woolen frocks and the felt or velvet hats.

It's a pretty safe bet under any circumstances that the rouge that served in summer against a summer dress background will not be quite so good with heavier materials and deeper colors. The browns, for instance, that are so popular now call for a sharper toned rouge than was used along with summer things. The lipstick might take on a clearer red, too. And the green eye shadow probably wouldn't do at all with one of the autumnal browns.

LOCAL HOSPITAL APPROVED BY NATIONAL BODY

New York—The American College of Surgeons announced at the opening of its annual clinical congress that 66 cancer clinics in general hospitals and medical services in 80 industries have met the standards established by the surgeons' association and have been designated by them for approval. The list of these hospitals and industries will be published when the survey is completed. It was stated. The standards created are a part of the organization's intensive program for the control of cancer and better care of the sick and injured in industry.

"The American College of Surgeons," said Dr. B. C. Crowell, Chicago, director of clinical research for the college, "has sought a means of reducing the number of cancer cases, which now amount to more than a quarter of a million in the United States and Canada, and of bringing efficient treatment to persons having the disease. Scientific medicine has provided the knowledge that makes this possible if certain measures are taken. Such measures have been combined in the form of a standard to be followed by cancer clinics in general hospitals. Already 66 hospitals are known to meet the standard and more are equipping themselves to do so."

Speaking of the care of the injured, Dr. F. A. Bailey, Waukegan, Ill., said, "The American College of Surgeons has undertaken a very definite plan to improve the care of the 3,000,000 or more persons who are injured annually. In this connection a special survey of medical service in industries is now being carried on with a view to ascertaining which ones meet the requirements laid down by the college. Compliance with the standards means shortened periods of disability with a consequent decrease in the 250,000,000 days now lost to industry annually."

The list of approved hospitals in this state, as of October 1, 1931, has been announced. Institutions marked "Conditioned" have been conditionally approved, indicating that they have accepted the minimum requirements as laid down by the American College of Surgeons but for lack of time or other acceptable reasons have not been able to do so in every detail. The list includes the Salem General hospital.
