

NORMAN SCOTT ASKS HELP IN REDUCING TOLL

The average Oregon citizen, says Norman Scott, Salem high school student, is proud of the state's fine highways. And since he believes they are an asset to the state he should cooperate with the authorities in reducing the toll of traffic accidents. Mr. Scott won fourth place in the traffic essay contest participated in by Salem high school students under the sponsorship of the state police department. His paper follows:

What is traffic? With all the safeguards, laws, rules and regulations of the present day, why should there be so many accidents on our beautiful highways and byways? Those are the questions in the minds of men today; men who have seen the ox-carts of the plainsmen who have seen the buggy and the wagon—men who have seen the coming of the automobile, and who have witnessed its development.

Traffic, to the layman, is the flow of vehicles along a road, lane or byway. For the purpose of guiding this flow, certain regulations are put into effect for the betterment of the people. And it is to this end that all motorists, cyclists, and pedestrians should acquaint themselves with the laws and by-laws of the state of Oregon. It is not for the law abiding people that various penalties are imposed, but to free the communities from such persons as intoxicated drivers, hit-and-run fiends, and those who absolutely disregard signs and signals. The laws of the traffic division are to help the citizen and not to prove a detriment to him.

The average Mr. Citizen of Oregon is proud of his paved highways, imposing bridges, magnificent tunnels, and the beautiful scenery thus afforded him, and he takes pride in keeping within the law; he observes the rules; he obeys the road signs; and he is loyal to the highway division of the state of Oregon.

But only with the full co-operation of the traffic division and the people of Oregon will the death toll of this automobile age be suspended. To this end, let us lend our efforts toward a clearer and brighter outlook on our traffic problem.

LIBRARIES TAKE PLACE OF TEXTS

Public libraries in ever increasing measure are supplementing textbooks for use in Oregon schools. "A decade ago children were confined almost entirely to learning contents of their textbooks," said Harriet C. Long, state librarian. "Use of reference material to supplement the teaching of a textbook was limited."

"Now a child studying about Eskimos, for instance, takes to heart as before, the contents of his lesson book but also gets a broader background through use of library facilities. Perhaps he will wander into the history of the polar regions, incidentally pick up something of exploration and may become absorbed in totem poles—all of these painlessly increasing knowledge."

"Special reports are assigned to different students in modern teaching, each pupil presenting before the others the results of his investigation into certain fields. The method gives training in looking up needed material without having it doled out only by quota in specified books. Texts, of course, are always needed to tie together details of subjects studied."

"The increased demands for library facilities is being met in Oregon with the purpose of giving a maximum in good reading at a minimum of expense. State library staff members are constantly engaged in examining books suitable for use in elementary and high school libraries. At intervals of several years, complete listings of recommended volumes for use in school reading rooms are published. Supplements to the lists are printed annually."

PRIVILEGES OF LADS CUT OFF

Limitation of privileges rather than infliction of stern punishment is the new idea in enforcement of institutional discipline. "The newer method is productive of better results than the old," said Sam Laughlin, superintendent of the boys' training school at Woodburn. "We are not running a 'softy' institution, however," said the superintendent, "the boys are not being coddled although corporal punishment is limited. Stern disciplinary measures would cause a spirit of rebellion and resentment. Privileges given for good behavior give the boys something to work for, not the negative stimulus of avoiding punishment." Training school cottages now house 87 boys. Staff employees number 24, many only part time. Teachers responsible for cottages are on call at any time during day or night.

The adage of the early bird and the worm gets a hearty play at the school," continued Laughlin. "Some boys get up at 4 o'clock in the morning to go to work in the barns. By 5 o'clock they are back at their cottage homes, the early chores finished."

"Various shops provide employment. In these, training is given in construction of useful articles such as clothing and shoes as well as woodworking. Boys who exhibit good behavior and are mentally efficient are given paroles. At present, 600 are out for duration of good behavior."

"Rural areas contribute most of the school population, largely because cities have more facilities for training of juveniles without sending them to state correctional institutions. Of the last 50 boys registered, 36 came from country communities."

ALBANY TO BE LINE TERMINAL

Albany—Albany is to be the terminal of the new Oregon Electric railroad leading into the eastern Linn county timber country, it was announced here Wednesday, with a daily freight service from here to Sweet Home being inaugurated Friday. L. S. Davis, district freight manager made the announcement, while here in the interests of his company. The daily train is to leave Albany in the morning and return from Sweet Home in the evening. It is understood that a passenger service may be established later. Because of Albany being named as the terminal a number of families are to move to this locality, it was said. The first train over the route Friday is being acclaimed at Sweet Home, and citizens of that vicinity are planning a reception. CASEYS WILL DANCE St. Paul—A dance, given by the K of C's will be held in the K of C hall Friday evening. Music is being furnished by the St. Paul Rhythm Kings.
