Famous Woodburn Arch Soon To Become Relic When Widening Starts

Woodburn—The famous Woodburn arch, which for almost 10 years has announced to the world that Woodburn is the "World's Berry Center," will soon be no more. Its doom was sealed when the highway widening operations started and as the grading crew draws nearer the hours of its life are shortened. Under present conditions the motto which it has so proudly borne has become inappropriate and it is fitting that with the wrecking of the berry industry the arch should also go down in a heap.

A committee from the Woodburn chamber of commerce met at the Bank of Woodburn Thursday morning to consider the matter and the consensus of opinion was that the highway commission be given permission to dismantle the arch and that the committee would obtain a place to deposit the remains. It is not the purpose of the citizens of Woodburn to use the arch again as an arch but to salvage the material for charitable purposes.

E. J. Stanard was the moving spirit in the erection of the arch and conceived the idea while on a trip through the state of Washington in 1922 where he saw arches of different design spanning the highway between counties. On his return he laid the matter before the Commercial club and the idea was adopted. John P. Hunt was president of the club at that time and appointed a committee of which Stanard was chairman to solicit funds for its erection. The money was donated by public subscription from the immediate vicinity and the total cost was about $500. It was completed in 1923, the builders being C. A. Parr, W. H. Aleman and Arma Elliott, all of whom donated a large portion of their labor. By a strange coincidence all three of these men are now deceased. Each column of the arch rests upon a solid concrete block four feet square widening at the bottom to six feet. Four steel rods run from the top of the arch and it will be some job to remove the tons of concrete upon which it rests.

Another meeting of the committee will be held Saturday morning at the Bank of Woodburn to decide upon the final disposition of the salvaged material.
