Calvin Coolidge

It will take the clearer perspective of the future to assign the position Calvin Coolidge will occupy in history. Contemporary times are too swayed by prejudice and partisanship to properly estimate the man or his work. We see as through a glass darkly.

Mr. Coolidge evidently will not be ranked among the great presidents. Though not lacking in courage and determination and possessed of homely wisdom, dry humor and common sense, he lacked the vision essential to great leadership. He was the product of his time and was content to let the ship of state drift into the sea of inflation produced by after-the-war prosperity. When it neared the breakers of deflation, that spelled shipwreck, he was canny enough "not to choose to run again," and retire.

How much of the responsibility for the depression will rest on the Coolidge regime is for future historians to determine. Our "invisible government" of big business was at the helm and whenever a stimulant to inflation was needed, it was forthcoming from the White House or treasury—while the safeguards provided by the federal reserve act, were officially set aside.

Because of the remarkable prosperity that prevailed during the Coolidge tenure of office, he received popular credit for it, just as his successor received the blame for its collapse, and this accounted largely for his popularity, accentuated perhaps by the personal idiosyncrasies of a typical New Englander. His retirement did not end his usefulness or his public service and his untimely death is universally regretted.

A Chance to Economize

We loudly condemn the nations of Europe for maintaining large armaments, when they cannot pay their debts. All the allied nations are spending more on armies and navies than they did before the world war—but we have little to complain of, for we are doing the same ourselves, not only the United States but the state of Oregon.

The secretary of state's records show the state expenditures for the national guard were as follows:

Biennium	Appropriated	Biennium	Appropriated
1905-1906	$9,077.45	1919-1920	$65,723.41
1907-1908	90,000.00	1921-1922	75,000.00
1909-1910	110,193.00	1923-1924	173,000.00
1911-1912	217,743.83	1925-1926	188,032.35
1913-1914	219,950.00	1927-1928	238,201.00
1915-1916	163,723.49	1929-1930	237,800.00
1917-1918	180,263.00	1931-1932	232,984.00

Thus we find the cost of the national guard in Oregon has risen from $90,000 in 1907-8 to $232,984 in 1931-2, an increase of 158 percent. It has increased from $75,000 in 1921-2 to $232,984 in 1931-2, an increase of 210 percent in a single decade, with the nation as well as state at peace with the world. The only time the national guard has been utilized in this interval was in a futile search for escaped convicts.

We are spending more on the Oregon national guard, in this day of depression than we spent in any year of prosperity. We are spending more than we spent when the guard was sent to patrol the Mexican border, $53,000 more than in the first two years of the world war. Only in the period of bringing the troops back from across the sea and demobilizing them, has the national guard cost more than at present.

If the legislature wants to economize, and it certainly should facing a $4,000,000 deficit and an unbalanced budget, the national guard should be put on a peace time basis—for it is a costly luxury to taxpayers. Why is it sacrosanct?

White Washed

The long drended report of Jonathan A. Butler, of the Big Ten conference investigating professionalism, proselytizing and other wrong doings in the Pacific Coast intercollegiate conference in 1931, proves to be a virtual whitewash of the institutions. No names are mentioned, little found wrong and each of the ten member schools given an endorsement. This is not surprising, for judged by practices prevailing among the Big Ten, the coast colleges deserve rewards of merit.

The findings in regard to Oregon institutions are summarized as follows:

Oregon state: Fifty three athletes employed on the campus last year at 40 cents an hour, and earned their pay. The Orange Council, an alumni group, violated conference rules in seeking athletes.

Oregon: No recruiting has been done by the present coaching staff, although the previous staff aggressively persuaded high school athletes to attend Oregon. Fifty four athletes during 1931-32 were aided by the Oregon Commonwealth Scholarship fund in amounts ranging from $10 to $40 a month, the only students who received such aid.

Scholastic requirements of the conference are so liberal players can compete in intercollegiate games after they have been probationed by their own schools. Coaches are frequently "embarrassed" by finding high school athletes at booster clubs when they appear as speakers. Conference rules forbid coaches to talk to potential college athletes. Some alumni groups aid Trojan and Husky athletes, but the conference has no rules against such aid.

The investigation was necessarily superficial, for most alumni activities, both in proselytizing and in rendering financial aid or providing sinecure jobs are subrosa and not easily traced. Even a strengthening of conference rules will not abate these abuses and professionalism will flourish as long as football is made a commercial business instead of a college sport.

WORLD'S GREAT TENDER TRIBUTE TO COOLIDGE

(By the United Press)

Calvin Coolidge was eulogized today by the world's most distinguished leaders in all walks of life. Their tributes included these: President Hoover (in a public proclamation): "This name had become in his own lifetime a synonym for sagacity and wisdom; and his temperance in speech and his orderly deliberation in action bespoke the promptness of his responsibility which guided his conduct of the public business."

President-Elect Roosevelt: "The nation suffers a great loss in his sudden and untimely passing. I shall never forget his interest and friendly interest in me in 1920 when he defeated me for vice-president."

Premier MacDonald of Great Britain: "I am truly shocked."

Former Premier Herriot of France: "His integrity and his sympathy earned for him the respect of the chiefs of all foreign governments."

Chief Justice Hughes: "The country has sustained an irreparable loss."

Vice President Curtis: "The nation has lost one of its strongest men."

Speaker Garner: "While we differed politically, I held great admiration for his tenacity of purpose and high character."

Alfred E. Smith: "I had strong admiration for him and since he left Washington we had been very pleasantly associated."

Newton D. Baker: "His long public career will remain as one of the most fortunate in our annals."

General James G. Harbord: "The death of Calvin Coolidge under existing circumstances is a national tragedy."

Owen D. Young: "Heavy as the loss would be of any time it is greater now when in many ways we need him most. Our want of confidence was met by his firm faith; our irritations and turbulence were calmed by his placidity. In these days of loss of faith in leaders, our trust in him remained unimpaired."

Technocracy

Claims for and Against

The fourth and concluding article on Technocracy.

(Copyright by United Press)

New York, Jan. 6 (UP)—Having led its followers to a mountain top of statistics and permitted them to view the precipice of world collapse, technocracy might be expected to point, in the distance, to some utopian civilization.

Instead, technocracy merely says, "Well, here we are, and what are you going to do about it. I got you up here, but you'll have to get down by yourself."

There have been vague suggestions that society can reconstruct its measures and standards—that we should use the symbol for some unit of energy, like the "erg," for measurement of human values, instead of the dollar sign. But the technocrats stop right there.

In other words, when they are planned down, they admit they have no solution for what they term the machine-age crisis. And they do not pretend to have any. Therefore, technocracy is not a panacea for the world's economic ills. It is not communism nor socialism. It has no blue-print for the future of civilization.

It is, merely, a "plan for study," and not a method for operating society. It is limited, at least at present, to the gathering of figures, the analysis of statics, the arranging of facts, which may or may not be valuable in charting trends of industry and economics—dependent upon the accuracy of the facts obtained.

Howard Scott, who seized upon it as "Technocracy," and built around it his pseudo-science, defines it as: "a method of scientific procedure in operating a mechanism of a continental order of magnitude, and not one of political partisanship based either upon class antipathy or class dominance."

"That is an admission that technocracy has no political phase whatsoever. How it could be enforced—provided it developed the plan which today is lacking—is a matter of government, and technocracy will not concern itself with that."

Dr. Irving Fisher of Yale, says that technocracy's only function in solving unemployment is that "more technical activity might help the world to recover more quickly from the depression."

Dr. James W. Angell, himself a Columbia professor, calls the influence of technocracy improvement on employment "over-emphasized."

Dr. Dagland C. Jackson, of the Massachusetts institute of technology, says that "we cannot truthfully ascribe the cause of cyclic unemployment such as that of today to invention and machinery. They have added immeasurably to the comfort and happiness of ourselves and broadly, to the improved character and general stability of our employment."

Charles F. Kettering, president of the General Motors Research corporation, is another who disputes technocracy's findings: "We suffer not from over-production, but from under-circulation," he says, adding, "I'd like to have those fellows for my competitors."

When the sum total of the accomplishment of technocracy to date has been cast up, it seems to be this—"It has set the boys to thinking and arguing."

That, in itself, may prove to be no mean accomplishment.

The socialists brought down by an economist in Mr. Roosevelt's service. He advocated adoption of a budget formula to maintain the confidence of the people in government securities and yet relieve present day taxpayers from excessive burdens. He would do that by carrying over a small deficit to be paid off in future better years.

A tax reduction instead of an increase might be possible under these circumstances.

The news was shocking to the men up front because it means tossing out the window the 12-year theories of Mellon and Mills. It seems that is the only kind of treasury financing Washingtonians of both parties have ever thought of.

Under that system we have had almost annual tampering with taxation. The new idea would be to fix taxes at a certain fairly permanent level. The deficits of bad years would be paid off in the excess returns of good years.

The people and business would be relieved thereby of excessive burdens in times like these.

Apparently the idea is in the sounding out process. Gov. Roosevelt is not wedded to it exactly but is just trying to find out how the boys would feel about it. The boys have not sufficiently recovered from their surprise to know how they feel.

Unquestionably a definite policy will be ironed out in the forthcoming conference between Roosevelt and Garner and the other congressional leaders.

The sole difficulty is whether the price of government bonds can be maintained under it. That depends on whether the people would have confidence in the ability of the idea to work out safely over a period of years. A conservative administration of the plan might establish such confidence.

Bankers might not like it. They favor certainties instead of prospects.

The most important news out of Washington in the next two months will be the Harrison investigation of economics in the senate finance committee.

More conversations every day are swinging around publicly and privately to the search for a safe means of establishing easier money—the real motive behind the investigation. Democrats near or at the top are encouraging the move. Latest public convert is Senator George of Georgia who is playing with the idea of dollar revaluation. There are more who have not come out yet.

Those who should know are betting even money that something important will emerge from that hearing.

The move is being furthered by certain industries howling to high heaven about foreign competition due to depreciated currencies. The fishing, rubber shoe and lumber industries apparently are suffering most if protests being received by congressmen are any measure. You a good chance to do what he wants. That is why they will permit him a free rein in making government economies. They would not have done that with Hoover.

It may be different for Roosevelt after the ice is broken.

The treasury has been secretly sounding out bankers on refinancing government credit for longer terms. It means a higher interest rate. The base probably will be around 2 per cent. Short term money has been obtained recently at less than half that. Nobody knows how long that practice can keep up.

Tammany candidate for Speaker O'Connor claims to have enough votes to stop Rainey. . . . No one but him can count them. . . . Yarns about Mr. Roosevelt making up in the house speakership roughhouse are not true. . . . He is not particularly close to any of those running or threatening to run. . . . The forgotten soul of the administration is Eugene Meyer. . . . He has not uttered publicly since Mr. Hoover's Columbus campaign speech. . . . Is he smart? . . . You will find out when Mr. Roosevelt continues him as head of the federal reserve board. . . . A certain applicant for a diplomatic post was told at the state department there would be nothing doing in that line until February when examinations might be held for Russian diplomatic jobs. . . . Also a resolution for Russian recognition will be introduced shortly in the senate and hearings may be held on it. . . . The best information indicates actual recognition will await the coming of Roosevelt.

WEST SALEM AID PLANS ACTIVITIES

West Salem—The Ladies' Aid society of Ford Memorial church met Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. J. S. Miller at her home on Second street. Devotionals were conducted by Mrs. Phillips and Mrs. Evans. A silver tea was announced for January to be held at the home of Mrs. Emmett Dickson, who is the chairman of the entertaining group. Her assistants will be Mrs. J. I. Miller, Mrs. Frank Forrester, Mrs. W. D. Phillips and Mrs. Lyle Thomas.

It was decided to have a "hard times" social in connection with a jitty lunch of pie and coffee in the basement of the church in the evening of January 27.

Mrs. W. L. La Due and Mrs. Roy Finster were appointed as a committee in charge with power to choose all their assistants necessary.

A report of a woman and children ill and in need was brought to the attention of the Aid and they will receive assistance.

Included in those present were Mesdames A. L. Applewhite, J. R. Bedford, W. D. Phillips, E. A. Dickson, S. H. Crensy, W. L. La Due, B. A. Shoff, J. A. Gosser, Guy C. Stewart, Darrell T. Bradford, George Lathrop, Roy Finster, John Evans and the hostess, Mrs. J. S. Miller.

For prompt relief take a couple of Groves Laxative Bromo Quinine immediately upon catching cold. This will usually expel the cold overnight and thus prevent the spread of the infection within your system.

Groves Laxative Bromo Quinine is effective because it does the four things necessary. It opens the bowels, kills the cold germs and fever in the system, relieves the headache and grippy feeling. Tones the entire system and fortifies against further attack.

Groves Laxative Bromo Quinine contains nothing harmful. May be safely taken by young and old and whether you stay indoors or go out. There is absolutely no penalty attached to its use. For more than 40 years it has been the standard cold and gripe tablet of the world, the formula keeping pace with Modern Medicine. Groves Laxative Bromo Quinine now comes in two sizes—30c
