LUMBER TRADE BE BENEFITED BY INFLATION

Seattle, April 21 (AP)—Far-reaching benefits for the Pacific northwest lumber industry were foreseen today by Col. W. B. Greeley, secretary-manager of the West Coast Lumbermen's association, from any general increase in commodity prices through President Roosevelt's policy of controlled inflation.

The benefits should come, he explained in a long statement, not only from increased sales in the agricultural regions of the country, but also in many other sections where more homes are needed, as well as in the export markets.

"The agricultural regions of the United States are many years behind in even the necessary farm repairs and improvements," Colonel Greeley said, "and even a slight increase in the buying power of the farmer will be reflected in some additional purchases of lumber.

"The same will be true of the large market for building materials in the repair and modernization of dwellings in all parts of the United States, which will be measurably stimulated by any improvement in general commodity values."

Continuing, Colonel Greeley said that while the construction of new buildings would not respond as quickly to the increase in commodity values, there was still a widespread need in many sections of the country for more homes, especially inexpensive single houses which will "sooner or later" be built in large numbers.

The west coast lumber industry is in a particularly favorable situation to await such stimulated buying, he went on to say.

"Because of its depleted stocks, the industry has made substantial gains since last fall in stabilizing and moderately advancing lumber prices. It is in a sound position to make further gains, whenever buying is resumed," he said.

In addition, the nation's export markets should be benefited.

aloft several hours.

The ship circled gracefully off to the southeast, her aluminum painted cigar-shaped bulk gleaming in the early morning sun.

After the Macon had been aloft an hour and a half, Capt. Dresel sent raido orders to dismiss the ground crew until 5 p. m., Eastern Standard time, indicating the ship would remain up well over 11 hours. She took off at 5:59 a. m.

A minor accident was the only untoward incident as the Macon nosed off into a six-mile an hour northeast breeze shortly after daybreak. J. E. Wilson, a member of the ground crew, slipped from a platform of the giant mobile mooring mast and suffered possible fractures of the legs. He was taken to a hospital for an X-ray.

testified that S. E. Purvine ordinarily weighed from 174 to 176 pounds, was 57 years old and about 5 feet 8 or 9 inches high. This rebuttal was to answer inferences in Ferrar's testimony that he was afraid to be left alone in a room with Purvine and Miss Wilson when, as Ferrar had testified, it was apparent Purvine was attempting to lock Ferrar and Bickle into the room where the alleged assault took place.

Miss Maria Wilson, acting executive secretary of the Red Cross, was recalled to the stand and testified that Ferrar, when he asked for aid from the Red Cross, had said that he had been a resident of Marion county for three years, lived on route 3, Salem and was a single man. Ferrar had stated at the trial he had resided in the county three months and Miss Wilson's testimony was to impeach Ferrar's statement. Roy Hewitt, Ferrar's attorney, attempted on cross examination to show that the Red Cross had no right to elicit the information as to period of residence, that it was indicated if a man came along hungry he couldn't get help unless he had been a resident of the county for a year or more, and that Ferrar had not made the statement under oath or had it been read to him after put down on Miss Wilson's notes.

Ferrar in his testimony yesterday afternoon admitted a struggle with Purvine, saying he caught hold of Purvine's hands and held them to keep him from locking the door of the room in which the men were. Purvine, he said, had locked one door and started to lock another when he grabbed him. His inference was that he and his companion Hud Bickle were afraid to be alone in the room locked in with Purvine and Miss Wilson. Ferrar also stated on the stand that if it had been necessary and there was no relief agency the men would have gone to a store and got provisions for the family he was trying to gain assistance for.

Ferrar denied that he belonged to or contributed to any organization with communistic tendencies, but admitted he assisted in organization of the unemployment council.

Hud Bickle, Homer Green and Dick Eastman also testified as to various things which transpired at the Red Cross headquarters the day of the alleged assault, the three, Ferrar's companions, appearing for the defense.

Deputy District Attorney Page in his opening argument accused Ferrar of criminal syndicalism in his remark in regard to going to a store and getting provisions if none were available any other way. The court ordered the jury to disregard the remarks. C. E. Emmons, opening the defense, declared that what Ferrar did he did in self defense and praised the work of the committee representing the unemployed as the work of men who were out to assist people desperatley in need and starving. Closing arguments were given for the defense by Roy Hewitt and for the state by District Attorney Trindle.

of the principal foreign governments preliminary to the world economic conference," Robinson said, "that fact should be known to the country."

"The president feels," Robinson continued, "that it is essential that such action as the congress may be disposed to take shall be taken as soon as possible.

"Since a filibuster has been announced, I do not find it practicable to respond to that spirit by indicating a willingness to delay action on the amendment.

"We have the same situation in respect to almost every bill that comes in here. We frequently have amendments that senators oppose and they always have the opportunity of voting against the entire bill.

"If we wait until the preliminary conferences are over, the amendment will fail of its purpose.

"If we wish to strengthen the hand of the president in the very difficult task in which in my judgment he has the support of 93 per cent of the American people, regardless of race, color or previous condition of servitude, if we want to give him encouragement and assistance, we should define his authority in time for that definition to be of service."

Washington, April 21 (AP)—The administration credit-currency expansion program won quick approval from the senate banking committee today after democrats had split on the provision to authorize revaluation of the gold dollar.

President Roosevelt directed that the legislation be speeded to enactment with the mammoth farm bill—and debate will be shut off if necessary, to kill a filibuster.

About the same time, a high official of the federal reserve said in an interview that an agreement had been reached for the federal reserve system to support wholeheartedly the administration's inflation program by purchasing government securities.

The purpose would be to release the funds tied up in those securities for other investment.

The banking committee approved the inflation program without a record vote, after a motion to strike out the provision authorizing the president to lower the gold content of the dollar by as much as 50 per cent had lost by a tie vote of 10 to 10.

Four democrats, including Chairman Fletcher, Florida; Glass, Virginia; McAdoo California, and Gore, Oklahoma, and six republicans wanted the gold provision eliminated, while eight democrats and two republicans voted to keep it in.

The division indicated a strenuous fight on the floor over the provision, although some opponents, including Fletcher, believed such power would not be exercised by the president if granted.

The secretary of the treasury, William H. Woodin, and the budget director, Lewis W. Douglas, had endorsed the Thomas bill and explained administration plans for proceeding under it to boost commodity prices, thereby spreading work.

The committee adopted a resolution by Senator Walcott (R., Conn.), recommending that the program be treated as a separate bill although it was reported as an amendment to the farm relief measure as proposed by Senator Thomas, (D., Okla.), yesterday.

A motion to strike out that part of the proposal authorizing the president to lower the gold content of the dollar up to 50 per cent lost on a tie vote of 10 to 10, after a first vote of 9 to 8 had eliminated this section.

Meanwhile, the house republican steering committee—meeting with Ogden Mills, Hoover secretary of the treasury, who has been busy knitting republican opposition to the bill—decided it would be futile to oppose the legislation in the house if it passes the senate.

Aroused by Mills' activities, Representative Dies (D., Tex.), introduced a resolution of congressional investigation of the same, which he termed "lobbying" against the Roosevelt program.

WEST RENEWS DONAUGH FIGHT

Portland, April 21 (AP)—Ex-Governor Oswald West, who was credited with leading a revolt several months ago against Carl Donaugh, state chairman of the democratic party, renewed his attack here yesterday at a meeting of the Willamette club.

"If you democratic job-hunters are going to get anywhere," West declared, "you will have to get your chairman a job so something can be done for the rest of you."

He had accused Donaugh of "having thought only of landing a federal job for himself." The state chairman has been mentioned prominently for the post of United States attorney here.

Governor Meier and Congressman Pierce also were subjects of West's attacks. He said the governor had consistently refused to lend a ready ear to democrats. He accused Pierce of having voted with a republican minority and advised him to "play the democrat and help the administration."

Highway Funds

others connected with a campaign being waged in Washington to turn relief legislation into the channels of highway construction.

To Oregon particularly the necessity of creating a congressional sentiment militantly favorable to such a program is vital at this time. To this state enactment of the legislation being sought would mean:

Almost immediate employment of thousands of idle men.

Uninterrupted continuance of highway construction operations directed toward completion of a state system giving every community adequate road facilities.

Creation of a transportation system essential to full development of the state's resources.

Reconstruction to adequate standards of highways rendered almost obsolete by rapidly multiplying traffic and improvement of motor vehicles.

Whether or not the battle for emergency federal highway money is to succeed hinges solely upon the pressure that "the people back home" can bring to bear upon their representatives in the national capital, according to word received from Washington. It is a battle between the east and the west and south, with the east (ever unmindful of the millions of acres of land removed from the tax rolls of the western states for inclusion in national forest and other reserves) contending for a monster relief program of such public works as buildings, water works, sewage disposal plants and improved waterways.

There is no inclination on the part of the western and southern states to deny to the east, with its already highly developed road systems, a construction program to relieve the unemployment problem in populous eastern cities. The contention of the west and south is that any unemployment legislation must be nationwide in its scope, and that highway construction projects are the most readily adaptable to prompt unemployment relief.

They want their share of the fund in the form of road money, if they see fit to utilize it in that manner.

The situation in Oregon is typical of that existing in most other western and southern states where economic conditions have practically halted highway construction activities financed through state taxes of one form or another.

Cessation of active and extensive highway construction operations here find the state highway commission with a carefully developed six-year program of extension and betterment shelved by the lack of funds. Unless anticipated revenues should exceed the most reliable estimates Oregon will have no money for new projects during the coming two years. Every cent available under a drastically curtailed budget will be required for necessary maintenance.

Included in the delayed six-year program are road projects scattered from one corner of the state to the other totalling in excess of $16,000,000.

For fully two-thirds of these projects surveys, plans and specifications are either completed or sufficiently far advanced to enable work on them to be started within 30 or 60 days.

There would be no time-consuming and money-wasting delays in setting up administrative machinery, which already exists in state highway organizations and the federal bureau of public roads. Other forms of public works, it is pointed out, would require the organization of loosely coordinated administrative forces, preparation of plans and involve other delays incidental to preliminary work.

The specific program being tentatively advocated by the highway officials' association is embodied in the so-called Hayden bill and would include $100,000,000 for regular federal highway aid for the years 1934 and 1935; $100,000,000 for the construction of bridges and railroad grade crossing eliminations without participation by railroads (a safety measure), and $50,000,000 for secondary road construction under state supervision.

The slogan of the sponsors for the campaign is:

"If you favor this do more than tell somebody," and they urged that everyone interested immediately write or wire to his congressman and senators and to President Roosevelt himself.

be looked for; they concern other countries as well as ourselves. But the way must be paved for concerted action and I believe our meeting is necessary to that end.

"I wish to take the opportunity as I land in the United States of greeting my American friends. I well remember the warm welcome and the generous hospitality which you gave me in 1929. The friendship between our two countries then augmented has continued, I am happy to feel, to this day.

"Particularly am I pleased to meet your president and to discuss with him our common responsibilities. On the fourth of March I listened to his inaugural address, and since that day have followed with increasing interest the courageous efforts he has been making to fulfill the expectation which sprang from that remarkable speech.

"Your president has been good enough to invite me both as prime minister of my country and as chairman of the world economic conference, to come over to explore the problems which have to be dealt with at that gathering. I have accepted because I believe that we two are in harmony of spirit regarding all world causes, and agree that the most pressing of these at the moment is the removal of the economic distress that has befallen us. We must strive to clear the obstacles which block the highways of trade, both within our own countries and between the nations, and so restore the hope of employment to the workless millions who look to earn their living in factory and field."

Aside from the brief interview on the Berengaria and the formal statement to the press, the British prime minister also read a formal greeting to America. In this he said that he came now, as he did on his last visit, on a mission of peace.

"Today," he said, "I have come to America for the purpose of discussing with your president how we can conduct war against unmerited poverty."
