art department of the agricultural building Sunday in the presence of the woman in charge and a man who was removing exhibits. This man saw the boy walking away with the plane and asked him what he was doing with it. The boy replied that some big boy said he could have it and he wanted to see if it would float in water. He was allowed to depart unmolested.

When Bob reported his loss he was given a description of the boy who had stolen the plane and had no difficulty in finding him. He was taken to the police station and recognized as a boy who had often been in trouble before, too young to send to the reform school, and he was turned loose, the matter not even being reported to his parents. Efforts on the part of Mrs. Beckman for some adjustment of the matter have met with no response from the fair officials.

An aeronautical engineer from Hood River had examined the plane a few days previous to its tragic end and said it was worth at least $50 even in these hard times. Bob was planning to exhibit the plane elsewhere and is broken hearted over his loss.
