Japanese Dancer To Appear Here

Salem folk are more than interested in the announcement that the Salem MacDowell club, one of the outstanding musical groups in the capital city, will sponsor Michio Ito, internationally famous Japanese dancer, at the Grand theater October 10. The program will be the first of a series which the MacDowells will sponsor during the winter season.

A figure of romance is Ito. The week before his London debut he was almost starving. A week later world famous overnight, he found his name emblazoned on all the billboards of London, and the most talked of dancer in Europe shortly afterward he was honored by a "command" appearance before Queen Alexandra.

It's fame as a dancer of amazing originality and rare artistry spread throughout the world like wildfire. America, with its myriads of dance lovers, called him and the young Japanese artist set forth for the New World, where his success was similarly sensational.

Charles Griffes, America's great composer, was so impressed with the dance genius of Ito that he arranged his "White Peacock" for him and himself accompanied Ito at its first presentation. At the Griffes Memorial concert in New York, Michio Ito was one of the participants, appearing in several dance numbers especially arranged for him by Griffes.

In addition to giving his own recitals throughout the states Ito has been responsible for ten successful stage productions in New York.

His productions of the ballet from "Prince Igor" at Hollywood Bowl two years ago, which was witnessed by a number of Salem folk sojourning in the south at that time, was an outstanding feature of the Bowl season. His "Pageant of Lights" at Pasadena Rose Bowl, in which over 200 dancers participated, also won him wide acclaim.

International artists who have studied with Ito in recognition of his genius include Ruth St. Denis, Maria Gambarelli, Ganna Walska, Gertrude Hoffman, Anna Enters, Martha Lorber, Clare Luce, Eleanor Painter and many others. Michio Ito is now a world figure—a cosmopolitan individual appearing at Salem as a MacDowell club will indeed be fortunate to have him as their guest artist in mid-October.
