HAZEN SPEAKS ABOUT AUTHORS HE INTERVIEWED

Silverton—The literary treat of the year for members of the Silverton Parent Teachers' association, was the address Thursday afternoon by David Hazen, internationally known newspaper man, traveler and writer. In his "Talks with Literary Celebrities," Hazen's accounts of interviews with authors clearly portrayed the writers, the pleasantries and otherwise characteristics of those he met. Eleven of the best known writers were spoken of, and included Gertrude Atherton, young at 78 who refused her rule for makeup, Mrs. Atherton does not like to write short stories.

Ida M. Harbell is the same age as Mrs. Atherton, not much younger there and whose remark, "We are starving in gold," left a prophetic impression upon the listeners. Mrs. Pearl S. Buck, beautiful, a thorough student of her Chinese characters, and carefully on her guard as to comments on countries of the Orient, left no doubt as to the fitness of the author of "The Good Earth."

Mary Roberts Reinhardt is the richest author. Her own company and incorporation. She was to be interviewed only by the speaker boarding the same train as the famous writer and opening a conversation about the letters of her husband, recently deceased.

Eva Emery Dye, beloved, charming, kindly, yet secretive, with only regrets that she might not live to write many more of her wonderful books.

Sinclair Lewis, the temperamental, peculiar character of them all, yet kindly in spite of his queerness. Christopher Morley, the exact counterpart of Lewis, fine, big and kind. The co-editor of the Saturday Review. Time for callers.

Babe Ruth, the sports writer, was contacted by a ruse of complimenting him on not being a ghost writer. The speaker took Paul Lawrence Dunbar to dinner and secured a splendid interview with the famous negro writer.

The most conceded author of them all was Theodore Dreiser. Hamlin Garland wants to reform the movies and lives altogether in the past.

William Allen White understands boys of all nations for he knows they are all alike. White was easy to talk to.

Mrs. J. J. Lewis sang two numbers, "Sa Tu Mah Mi," by Pergolesi, and "If I Were You," a lighter selection. Mrs. Pearl Davenport accompanied at the piano.

Mrs. Warren E. Crabtree, president, introduced the speaker and presided at the brief business session. Miss Helen Raitanen served as secretary.
