TRAGIC ACCIDENT NARROWLY AVERTED

Hazel Green—What might have been a tragic accident was averted recently when Merle Aspinwall and son Hubert were hauling their winter wood supply. The wood was located in a draw on fudding river with a steep hill as a drawback to easy hauling. So Aspinwall conceived the idea of using a heavy Dodge sedan with a trailer attached to the rear by a long cable. The trailer was loaded with wood and Hubert operating the car above the hill made several safe and quick hauls.

However, on the last trip after adjusting the emergency brake and leaving the car in low gear Hubert started down the hill about when some movement of the cable caused the car to descend through trees and stumps, finally passing through a huge pile of cordwood and upsetting. After rescuing the car from its position with the aid of a tractor it was found that despite its perilous descent not a trace of damage occurred, barring several dents made in the rear, caused by contact with the woodpile. Hubert says he will not soon forget how quickly he moved aside when he turned and saw the car coming down the hill.
