His dog trailed the wounded bird through the grass and underbrush and appeared to be setting it Horskny rushed to the place where he presumed the bird to be and there was the thoroughly rankled skunk all set for warfare. The man and his dog were both victims of the skunk's barrage—both were gassed, nauseated and rendered noncombant. Soon after Horskny's episode with the skunk, his companion, Henry Catlin spied another one, but was forewarned and Catlin "fumigated" the skunk with his shotgun.
