

NEW SOVERIGN NOW RULER OF BRITISH EMPIRE

a painless coma at Sandringham house

The new king and his brother, the Duke of York, now heir presumptive to the throne, flew from Sandringham to London for the ceremony making him ruler of one-fourth of the world, king of Great Britain and Ireland and of the dominions beyond the seas, and emperor of India.

Thousands of the new king's subjects milled outside as the councilors and assisting dignitaries approved the proclamation saying that "We, therefore, the lords spiritual and temporal of this realm, being assisted with these of his late majesty's privy council, with numbers of other principal gentlemen of quality, with the lord mayor, aldermen and citizens of London, do now, hereby, with one voice and consent, publish and proclaim that the high and mighty Prince Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David is now, by the death of our late sovereign of happy memory, our only lawful liege lord, Edward VII."

The king wore morning garb for the first part of the ceremony, which consisted of a meeting of the lords in council. Then he changed quickly, dashing back across the courtyard and re-appearing for the meeting of the privy council itself in full admiral's dress, complete with cloak, cocked hat and sword.

A military guard saluted as he appeared. King Edward then took the oath to respect the Church of Scotland and signed a proclamation preserving the continuity of office of his ministers and the public services.

The king did not appear before his people. After spending a quiet hour at York House, his residence, he walked hatless across the state apartment of St. James' palace, perfectly groomed and wearing mourning dress.

The arrival of the lord mayor's coaches for the ceremony, with the privy councilors in scarlet coats and cocked hats, the judges in wig and gown, and other dignitaries, caused the crowd to break through the police lines at the rear of the palace court.

Mounted police rode into the throng, pushing them back. Several among the crowd of 5,000 were knocked down and the police had difficulty clearing the way for the lord mayor's coaches and the limousines of the others.

The lord mayor alighted from his gilded coach, dressed in gay medieval trappings. Four coachmen in buff greatcoats and gold cockaded top hats manned the coach.

The king, in his somber mourning garb, was a dignified figure amidst the resplendent robes and uniforms of the others.

While the ceremony was in progress the late king lay in the darkened bedroom of Sandringham house where he died. The body will be taken tonight to the little village church where he worshipped, to be guarded by foresters and game keepers from his estate.

On Thursday the body will be transported to Westminster Abbey to lie in state until the funeral. It then will be buried among the other kings at Windsor.

The privy councilors and others took the oath of fealty to the king, kissing his hand as they knelt. The proclamation will be read to the public by royal heralds at St. James' palace tomorrow. Then it will be read at Charing Cross, Temple Bar, the corner of Chancery Lane and on the steps of the Royal Exchange in "the city."

The privy council meeting marked the first engagement of the Duke of Gloucester, third son of the late king, outside Buckingham palace since he became ill recently. Wearing his familiar Hussar's uniform with the ribbon of the Order of the Garter, he arrived late with the Duke of York. They had been held up by traffic congestion.

The Duke of York wore a naval uniform, with the ribbon of the Garter.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, dressed in purple and white vestments, stumbled as he stepped from his car, but a footman seized his arm and saved him from falling.

The crowd watching the pageant extended deep into St. James' park, jammed the Marlborough gate alongside the palace and overflowed into the square in front of it.

EXTORTION PLOT AGAINST CANTOR

Los Angeles, Jan. 21 (AP)—The Examiner said today it has learned Eddie Cantor, millionaire comedian, was the target of an extortion plot recently which threatened his five daughters with harm unless he paid $5,000.

The Examiner said two extortion letters were received at the Cantor home in Beverly Hills on successive days several weeks ago. The first demanded "$5,000, or else." The second contained directions for making contact with the extortionists.

Cantor turned the letters over to federal agents and local authorities, the Examiner said. The second letter instructed the singing fun-maker to enclose $5,000 in an old shoe box and personally place it beside a large mail box at the corner of Third and Vermont in Los Angeles, the Examiner related.

Cantor volunteered to act as his own courier and take the money to the designated spot, but was dissuaded by authorities, the Examiner said. Cantor's limousine, driven by his chauffeur, was used to transport the cash, but the extortionists did not establish a contact, the Examiner stated. The Examiner said Cantor's daughters are reported under guard in the east. The comedian left recently for New York after completing a starring picture, now being released.

New York, Jan. 21 (AP)—"There's nothing to it," was Eddie Cantor's comment today regarding a Los Angeles report of an extortion plot threatening his five daughters unless $5,000 were paid. The comedian and his family have been in New York for some time.

He declined to say whether his daughters were being guarded.

KING'S FUNERAL ARRANGED FOR NEXT TUESDAY

sorrow, the princess royal, only daughter of King George and Queen Mary, and other members of the royal household went to Saint Mary of Magdalene's church this morning for a holy communion service.

The service was conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury who only a few hours before had given a last blessing to the dying king.

Unlike the remainder of the countryside, where flags whipped at half-staff in a strong wind, the royal standard on the little church flew from the top of its pole.

A symbol of the last half of the slogan, "The king is dead! Long live the king!" the standard always flies at full staff, signifying that the British empire is never without a ruler.

The late King George, four days after he contracted a sudden illness, succumbed at 11:55 o'clock (6:55 p. m., E.S.T.) last night to complications arising from a severe cold, bronchial catarrh and a heart weakness—a burden too heavy for the frail form to bear.

Steeling themselves for a double ordeal of burying the dead king and proclaiming the new sovereign, Queen Mary and her children wept and prayed over King George's bier as the empire of 450,000,000 subjects waited to do him homage.

Respecting their privacy, the saddened subjects and neighbors of the bereaved family left them to their sorrow.

From high and low, from all parts of the earth, came messages of condolence. Broadcasts were discontinued, and London crowds were hushed.

The court decided to transfer his majesty's body to St. Mary of Magdalene's church here late in the day to rest temporarily before the altar, as did the bodies of his mother, Queen Alexandra, his brother, the Duke of Clarence and Avondale, and his youngest son, John.

The church, only 600 yards from Sandringham house, is connected with the royal residence by the footpath over which the late King George and his queen walked on their way to and from worship.

The youngest son of King George to receive groceries from the county while 189 others will draw from $3 to $25 each month from the county.

A two weeks trial will be given the new program, Chairman E. L. Wiedner said and if it proves satisfactory it will probably be continued. Little lessening of the load is expected during the next few months.

Here's one cigarette that writes its own advertising..

It's like this—

You see I'm reading a Chesterfield advertisement and I'm smoking a Chesterfield cigarette, and all of you are smoking Chesterfields.

Now listen—Chesterfields are mild (not strong, not harsh). That's true isn't it?

Then you read "and yet they satisfy, please your taste, give you what you want in a cigarette." That says it, doesn't it?

Wait a minute—

It says now that Chesterfields have plenty of aroma and flavor. One of you go out of the room and come back. That will tell you how pleasing the aroma is.
