economic political affairs of the U. S. S. R. and the Arabian Nights code."

Leon Trotzky, the celebrated exile, has been accused by both the government and the defendants as the master of the plot, embracing not one but many attempts upon the life of Dictator Joseph Stalin.

Previous evidence had brought out that the counter-revolutionaries used secret compartments of trunks, invisible ink and other subterfuges in order to exchange information.

Holzmann, a reluctant witness, told of a meeting with Trotzky in Copenhagen at which he quoted the exile as saying:

"The only way to remove Stalin is through terror."

For a time during the examination of Holzmann, 54 years old, had been perching, the courtroom took on the appearance of a big happy family.

The Trotzky undercover man, with contradictory answers to the prosecutor's questions, drew frequent smiles and laughter from the spectators, the prosecutor, the judges, and even Holzmann himself.

At one point Holzmann said:

"Trotzky told me if Stalin was destroyed we would return to power."

Witnesses corroborated charges that there were at least three definite attempts to kill Stalin. The latest, witnesses asserted, was planned as a spectacular assassination in Moscow's red square during the May day demonstrations.

Bombs labeled "diploma" were to be delivered to Stalin as he stood atop the tomb of Nikolai Lenin, it was testified.

Denials by Trotzky from his Norway haven that he participated in the asserted plot to overthrow the government brought smiles from Soviet officials who remarked:

"Trotzky always denies everything. How is he to refute the weight of this evidence?"

While the 16 prisoners occupied a box enclosed by a low wooden railing, with stalwart red guards standing by, it was plain that the absent Trotzky actually was the man on trial.

TOWNSEND ORDERS EKWALL OPPONENT

Portland, Ore., Aug. 21 (AP)—Dr. F. E. Townsend, founder of the OARP, today ordered his Oregon organization to nominate an independent candidate to oppose Rep. William A. Eckwall, republican incumbent, and Mrs. Nannie Wood Honeyman, democratic nominee for representative in congress from the third (Multnomah county) Oregon district.

John E. Weir, representative of the national Townsend organization here, announced receipt of the telegram from Dr. Townsend and said he would present it to a district Townsend convention Saturday.

The telegram said: "Better go down to defeat for a Townsendite than remain inactive, knowing such inaction will result in an enemy being elected."

MORE LABORERS IMMEDIATE NEED

Portland, Aug. 21 (AP)—John Cooter, director of the farm labor division of the state employment service, said that several thousand more farm laborers will be needed in the near future when Oregon harvesting reaches its peak.

Cooter reported that Grains pass-hop growers will need five or six hundred more pickers the first of next week, and that after that Douglas county prune raisers and Klamath county potato growers would want help.

At least 8,000 pickers will be needed for Willamette valley hop picking early in September, he said.

Oregon City, Ore., Aug. 21 (AP)—Memories of the pioneer days of 80 years ago held Oregon City today as visiting thousands thronged the streets for the opening of the two-day territorial days celebration.

Bustled and bonneted ladies in long dresses and men wearing the rude costumes of the period before Oregon gained statehood dotted the crowds for the coronation of Queen Mildred I.

Delegations from every section of the county joined in the parade which required two hours to pass in review before the grandstand at Kelly field.

of numerous sessions

Colonel Mercer, though he had served as a distinguished soldier in his youth, did not win his title by military service. It was conferred upon him by several governors on whose staffs he served.

His life was adventurous and romantic. His attainments were versatile. He had a fluent command of words and a beauty of expression that might have ranked him as a poet. Some of his prayers as chaplain of the senate were ordered printed and copies were saved by the members.

In his adventurous life Col. Mercer, as a member of the federal secret service, is given credit for having rounded up single-handed the notorious Louisiana lottery gang. He had intimately known Lincoln, McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt.

Colonel Mercer was born in Green Castle, Ind., October 30, 1846. His father was a Methodist circuit rider. Naturally the son was intended for the ministry. At 15 years he was within a few weeks of graduation from Asbury university, later called DePauw, and ordination to the ministry when his father sent him to Washington to be under the guardianship of an uncle, fearing that at home the lad might slip away to join the army.

It was through connection with the uncle that young Mercer had an experience that he counted one of the most wonderful of his life. The uncle was an aide-de-camp on Lincoln's staff. On the night of July 21, 1861, a group of statesmen, soldiers and other dignitaries were gathered in Lincoln's rooms at the White House. The president, worn with worry, reclined on a lounge as he tried to shape his war policy. For word had come that things were going bad with the union army. Many years later Colonel Mercer embodied the experiences of that night in a Lincoln day address before the Oregon legislature, which he called "The Man on the Lounge."

Then later the boy rode in the same railway coach with Lincoln to Gettysburg and stood near him when he delivered the famous Gettysburg address.

He enlisted in the union army at 18 and was in the service two years, and was with General Sherman on the famous march to the sea. His contingent in the war was the Third Iowa cavalry.

For 11 years after the war Colonel Mercer was in the secret service. His rounding up of the Louisiana Lottery ring and other accomplishments made his services in demand and at one time he was loaned to the Canadian government.

When he retired from federal work he moved to Corning, Ia., where a daughter was born, and later to Montana, coming to Oregon in 1906.

Besides his work as sergeant-at-arms and chaplain of the senate he busied himself with legislative matters. He is credited, by some at least, with being the author of the Oregon election law and having fathered the condensed record method of senate and house. He is said to have condensed the detailed proceedings of the legislatures from the time that Oregon was admitted to statehood to the date of adoption of the condensed record system.

Colonel Mercer's first wife died some years ago in Eugene. He was married again after moving to Salem.

He was identified with the various orders of the Masonic lodge and also was active in the affairs of the Eugene Post, G. A. R. He came to Salem from Lane county.

He is survived by one daughter, Miss Wilma Grace Mercer of Eugene.

Funeral services will be held Monday, August 24, at 10 a. m., from Clough-Barrick chapel, here. Interment in Rose City cemetery, Portland.

BOARD DISCUSSES Y FAIR BOOTH

Plans for a display at the state fair which would give a comprehensive idea of the activities of the Y.M.C.A. were discussed last night when junior board members of the local association met to discuss the winter months' program. A committee, consisting of Rex Wirt, Dick Chambers, Bill Shinn, Bill and John Laughlin, was appointed to see if the exhibit can be arranged. It is the hope of the junior board to interest all of the associations of the state to take part in the exhibit.

Showing of motion pictures taken during camp life at Oceanside, in the public schools, was discussed last night. W. S. Chambers, Portland, northwest area boys work secretary, assisted in making up the program. He was introduced by Irving Hale, new boys work secretary for the Salem Y.

Prior to the conference the boys had a dinner prepared by Mrs. S. B. Laughlin, daughter Mary, Mrs. Ted Chambers and Laura Kihls.

ITALY AGREES UPON SPANISH NEUTRALITY

Rome, Aug. 21 (AP)—Italy accepted officially today the neutrality accord proposed by France in the Spanish civil war.

Premier Mussolini earlier in the day had sought through his envoys the reaction of foreign powers to abandonment of the neutrality negotiations.

That move, it was said, reflected his determination to accept no agreement which departed materially from his demands that "practical as well as moral" neutrality be observed.

In today's acceptance Italy officially agreed to prohibit all exports of arms to Spain provided France, England, Germany, Portugal and Russia agree to similar restrictions.

and apparently have been dead for a long time."

McCann, 50 and unmarried, was the first to be brought to the surface by the rescue crews. The crowd set up a wild cheering as he emerged from the narrow shaft and was rushed to an ambulance. The car sped toward a Moberly hospital, three miles distant.

Sexton, with Stoner part owner of the mine, was in a serious condition, but Dr. Maddox did not elaborate on his statement.

"This is one of the saddest things I ever went through," said Coroner Maddox.

"My son, a doctor, went down into the mine with me. We found the men in a room. One man, McCann, came out in perfect shape. He tells us one of the men died two hours after they were hemmed in.

"Monoxide gas is believed to have caused his death."

Anxiety at the mine, packed tight with vigilant relatives and curious spectators who had churned the soil to dust in their three-day vigil, reached fever peak early this afternoon when Dr. Maddox and his son, Dr. John Maddox, went down the shaft.

It had been understood previously that the younger doctor would enter the shaft only in the event some of the entombed men were found living.

"There's only one chance in a thousand the men are still alive," Arnold Griffith, state inspector of mines, had said earlier today as weary rescue crews hacked cautiously at the few remaining feet of debris which imprisoned the men in the depths of the Sexton coal mine near here.

From a three-quarter level, Griffith directed the rescue attempt. With the crew at the bottom was Vic Crigler giving the signals to Charles Hartig at the surface.

"O. K., hoist away," came Crigler's voice from the black depths, when the tub was filled.

"You're taking a long time down there," Hartig answered, "Everything all right?"

"It takes a long time," Crigler replied, "the men can't work too fast."

"How's the air?"

"It isn't any too good, but we're getting by. I'm going to send two men up."

"What's the matter?" asked Hartig, his voice betraying his anxiety.

"We've got to have some older men down here. I want to be sure no one loses his head. Here they come."

"They must be alive," Mrs. Edward Stoner, Jr., wife of one of the entombed kept repeating as she rested on a blanket. Last night, unable to restrain herself, the attractive brunette woman dashed under the rope holding back the crowds. Before she could get to the main shaft, she was stopped and escorted, half hysterical out of the forbidden zone.
