KITCHEN KINKS.....

Few of nature's gifts are so lovely to look at and few have earned so much praise in song and story as the grape. Poets have taken pages to tell of the beauties of the loaded vine and the purple fruit, dripping and sweet with juice. Anyone who lives in a grape country and can see the arbors, covered with luscious jewels, will really appreciate the poet's words, and anyone who does not live in the vineyard country can still appreciate the flavor of the fruit.

The use of grapes in salads is unlimited, and for harvest dishes they are a lovely garnish. They make a beautiful centerpiece for autumn tables, combined with leaves and other fall fruits. For jelly there is nothing nicer, and who doesn't enjoy grape juice?

Grapes are highly perishable and delicate. Moisture on the fruit will cause deterioration, and since they are apt to collect moisture while standing, place them where there is a free circulation of air. Look the bunches over frequently and remove spoiled grapes. However, do not handle the fruit unnecessarily.

When you have made your jelly, serve it for breakfast with hot and bran muffins, in jelly roll, to accompany a crown rib roast of lamb, on sandwiches, in tarts, and of course you have other favorite ways of using it, too. Here we give you the recipe for a new pastry that goes with jelly in tarts to perfection, and a recipe for muffins to eat with grape jelly at breakfast. This grape pie is good with the bean pastry, too.

GRAPE PIE
4 cups Concord grapes
1 tablespoon flour
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
recipe bran pastry
Wash and stem grapes; cut in half, remove seeds. Mix sugar, flour, cornstarch, salt and grated lemon rind together thoroughly; combine with grapes. Cook slowly until thick and clear. Stir occasionally, being care-
