versity City this afternoon and began a heavy, short-range bombardment of the positions still held as fascist invaders.

They announced the recapture of the national institute of biology in the northeastern Madrid section and said withdrawal of their forces from Casa de Campo park, across the Manzanares river from Madrid on the west, had strengthened the University City corps.

Official reports reached Madrid to confirm the sinking of a Spanish merchantman last Tuesday off Palamos, on the eastern Spanish coast, by 40 fascist shells from the insurgent cruiser Canarias. (The reports were strikingly similar to those heard at Franco-Spanish border points four days ago, and broadcast by insurgent radio stations last night.)

A day of heavy, freezing rain, gave the grateful capital respite from aerial bombardment.

Pressed by an increasing food shortage, the government offered free transportation to the eastern Levantine regions of Spain for women, children and old persons of both sexes.

The intense cold increased the hardships of the homeless. All available apartments in the so-called neutral zone in the northeastern part of Madrid were ordered listed, to find a refuge for the destitute. As many as nine or ten families were living in single apartments as the evacuation of the northwestern and western sections increased.

However, the defense junta announced all entrances to Madrid were blocked effectively and promised the suffering of Madrilenos would be only "temporary."

The diplomatic corps, it was declared, again has prompted its members to urge their respective governments to "take steps to prevent a recurrence of the cruel aerial bombings" of the last sixteen days. Official circles insisted the recognition of the burgos fascist government by Italy and Germany was an indication the insurgents had become convinced they would not take Madrid.

Today, General Jode Mañis, defense chief, declared: "The loyalists are maneuvering to crush the foe in a single, decisive battle."

Merger of Counties Favored by Holman To Promote Economy

By CLAYTON V. BERNHARD

At once showing keen interest, members of the legislative interim committee, state planning board, and others at the conference here this week leaned forward in their seats. "What was that you said, Mr. Holman?" Committee Chairman D. O. Hood asked.

"I said that Oregon has no need of 36 counties," the state treasurer replied.

And from then on Holman stole the show on state governmental reorganization at the board of control meeting.

"I know that making such a statement is not politically wise, but it is a fact," the treasurer said in explaining his stand. "Driving through the state a motorist can pass through a different county seat every hour and three minutes. Driving from my place in Portland to the state capital I pass through three county seats in an hour.

"This is one of the things your interim committee on state government reorganization will have to face sooner or later. With modern transportation facilities that many governments, and costly governments, are unnecessary. Surely people want and need local government, but not to that extent."

The treasurer, after protesting strongly the proposal to take the inheritance tax department from his jurisdiction and put it with the tax commission, offered suggestions for a state sinking fund commission, which, he said, would make it possible to handle city, county, district and state funds for far more advantage."

Two years ago the roll call at the house of the Oregon legislature started something like this: "Barnes, Bolvin, Bull." A new session is approaching and the trio right now is figuring more prominently than ever.

Two years ago the three took the friendly jibes of colleagues on their barnyard sounding names, even though none of them was a farmer. But now the situation is different and the three, all democrats, are in a two-way fight to control the speakership of the 1937 legislative session.

The past week saw Harry Bolvin of Klamath Falls announce sufficient pledges to assure him of the speakership election. Ellis Barnes of Portland has thrown his lot with Vernon Bull of La Grande to promote the latter for speakership against Bolvin. Barnes, it is generally known, would like to be chairman of the powerful house ways and means committee.

The "roll your own home" situation is becoming a problem in Oregon as well as in other states, and the legislature will be given an opportunity to give the matter some thought, word from the state department indicated.

Oregon laws provide for a trailer license, but there is no other regulation for the motorized homes. Some cities are putting in trailer camps and providing a small degree of sanitation, but other than that Oregon has no provision for this modern home living.

Secretary of State Earl Snell has stated that Oregon should take the lead to provide adequate sanitation for the trailer residents and should further provide some regulation and fee for the non-residents of the state. Some proposals will be put before the legislature.

Prominent democrats here declared the appointment of a federal judge to succeed the late John McNary has narrowed down to two men—Circuit Judge Earl C. Latour-ette of Oregon City and Attorney Evan Reames of Medford. Latour-ette is a brother of the national democratic committee.

Republicans, on the other hand, stated that should Senator Charles L. McNary wish it, he might win the appointment for himself. Friends of McNary are disagreed as to whether he would welcome such a proffer. Some said McNary would favor the appointment of Reames.
