

BACH TO BUILD AFTER CROWDS SEE FESTIVAL

Lebanon—The Steve Bach building at the intersection of Sherman and Main streets, partially destroyed by fire May 9, is nearly wrecked by a crew of workmen. Only a section of the quarters once occupied by Heyne's Music store was still standing late Thursday.

Bach, who will build a new building for a department store, will not start its construction until after the Strawberry festival June 4 and 5. The site will be entirely cleared before that date.

Echoes of the blaze were heard here in this week's council meeting when the mayor and city fathers joined in high praise for the swift response of the volunteer fire department. Almost every fire fighter was at hand within five minutes after the siren blew its first call.

Other officers selected were Bruce Stacy, vice-president; Marian Mitchell, secretary, and Lowell Baker, treasurer. LeRoy Ingram will retire as president.

The amendments are as follows: (1) appointment of a leader by student council rather than by vote; (2) elimination of the office of sergeant-at-arms, the vice-president to assume his duties; (3) appointment of representatives of each organization as members of the student council; (4) amendments to constitution to go into effect within 48 hours of their adoption, and (5) recommendation of coach or adviser to permit award of letters in any activity.

Demonstration Project For Valley Irrigation Is Given to Canby Section

Aurora, Or.—The model irrigation project for Canby district, estimated to cost $345,000 and to be financed by means of a non-interest bearing U. S. Bureau of Reclamation loan, was a step nearer this week when the Clackamas county court unanimously appropriated $400 to help match $1,000 to be spent by the U. S. bureau in verifying the feasibility of the 4300-acre project from an agricultural and economic point of view. The other $600 in match money is being contributed in equal amounts by the state engineering department and interested citizens of Clackamas county.

The original survey of the project, recently completed by the U. S. army engineers, the state engineers' office cooperating, has been sent to Washington for study by the U. S. Bureau of Reclamation. Complete in every detail, it showed that the project to irrigate 4300 acres in Canby district is feasible structurally and apparently so impressed Mr. Page that he expressed willingness to go ahead to the extent of checking the project thoroughly to determine if it is economically sound.

Under the tentative program, as outlined before the Canby Irrigation Project committee, of which Lloyd Smith of Canby is chairman, the money for the demonstration project would be loaned by the U. S. Bureau of Reclamation without interest for 40 years, the estimated cost to farmers of the area being $4 per acre per year including repayment of the loan and operating and maintenance costs.

Canby district was selected for the demonstration irrigation project by the state engineer's office, after the state legislature had appropriated $7500 for the survey. The U. S. army engineers who made the survey spent another $17,500 on the survey, one of the finest ever made in the west.

L. C. Stoll, executive secretary of the Clackamas county planning board, and Chairman Bernard Schoenberger, notified Commissioner Page and U. S. Senator Charles L. McNary in Washington that the $1,000 in match money had been raised. The planning board has actively sponsored the project from the start, working in close cooperation with County Agent John J. Inskeep and the Canby Irrigation project committee.
