EVE'S ORCHARD By MARGARET WIDDEMER

Synopsis: Eve Mansfield goes back to her 200-year old house and orchard in Connecticut after five years in New York. She plans to rent, marry, and city-loving Denny and return to Manhattan. But the tendency to stay in her beloved old home grows. "Uncle Henry and the Featherstones move in. George Cleveland, Eve's calm, practical neighbor who loves her, brings his father over one evening to play chess with Peter Featherstone, the penniless artist. Eve decides to speak to Mr. Cleveland about the job Denny is angling for.

Chapter 25 NEW JOB FOR DENNY As the daring idea came to Eve, the telephone rang. Everybody started except Mr. Cleveland, used to having secretaries answer for him. Judge, that well-trained child, rose from where he lay on his stomach on the hearthrug, went out and came back, reporting, "Denny wants you, Eve."

She was in the dark dining room in a flash. "Denny?" "Eve, darling." Before he could say any more she began to talk excitedly. "Denny, Denny darling, old Mr. Cleveland is in this very house as ever, playing chess with Peter, and he isn't an old sinner at all. He's a nice simple kind person and I'm going to tackle him myself about your job. I know it would be all right. Or let me make an engagement for you to do it."

"Eve!" his voice was almost sharp. "Eve, promise me you won't, you'll mess it all up." "But, Denny, why not if Mitzi can?" His voice had the patience of the male confronted with the unwise female.

"Listen to this, sweet. Mitzi is a splendid business-woman and an old friend of the whole family. She's got it in hand. If you or even I put in an act it will run things. She says so and she's right. She made me promise to leave it all to her. It's going grandly. So you promise to leave it alone. If you want to help your husband, be sweet to old Cleveland and keep your darling mouth tight shut about everything else. Mitzi says that's the only way to fix it. That isn't what I called about. Something perfectly magnificent has turned up—or it may be perfectly magnificent. Listen."

Eve held her breath, standing at the telephone. "Go on, Denny." "Something's broken. Herndon's given me Bill Bolles' territory. I always thought I could make good on the road. If I do, they're likely to make it permanent—and enough money for two to live on. I have to start early tomorrow morning. Mayn't be back for two or three weeks—it depends on whether Bill gets well or not, of course."

The excitement in his voice was echoed in Eve's head. "Oh, Denny, grand! And you with your fatal charm, of course, you'll do it!" "You adorable angel! Listen, promise to write me every single day. I'll long-distance if it gets too awful away from you. Don't let anybody else get you away from me. You're mine, you hear?"

She returned to the others finally, her cheeks burning, her heart pounding. Denny's excited adoring voice in her ears. George was preparing to go, remarking that they rose at seven. "He's a lamb," Marilyn said yawning, as the front door closed behind him. "I hope he comes over a lot, Peter, blessing, will you make me a glass of orange juice and bring it up if there are any oranges? Nighty night, Eve dear. Oh, leave things. Judge can tidy them in the morning."

knelling, putting in a bush, and answered. "One can't be overpractical. You don't seem to me—a little amble twined the corners of his mouth—" "Soedid. What brought that up?" "Marilyn and Peter. They'd rather live from hand to mouth than do potboilers." And Peter could make a good living at book covers and he knows nobody wants those mathematical swirly. All they have is an income they get twice a year from her father's estate. They could do so much more for Judge and not have to be all the time making those jokes about being paupers that are so sort of brave and pitiful, and need to have their friends always lending them things, if she'd try to write salable stories and he'd do commercial work. And yet—if you have a talent—

George said slowly: "It depends on whether it makes them unfair to other people. I was a bit worried about whether you had money enough to carry them all summer—" "Oh, it isn't for all summer!" Eve let go of the bush she had been hiding upright in its hole for him, to explain "Any time I rent they'll go, and they'll pay me when they get the income. June first. I have savings enough to manage 'til then." She stopped herself on the edge of telling him that when Denny came back with his now nearly certain traveling job she'd be married anyway. George rose and looked down at her with his kind worried blue eyes. "But, child, the real estate agent told me you had given up all idea of renting; you were going to stay here all summer."

"George! She's crazy—" "Look here, better let me run you down there." (To be continued)

Sundown Stories FLITTING BUTTERFLIES By Mary Graham Bonner

"I haven't stopped to watch butterflies in a long time," said Willy Nilly. "You're always so busy with your chores," barked Rip. "What a lovely spot this is," said Willy Nilly. "There are all kinds of butterflies flying around, a variety of wild flowers, I can hear birds in the distance and see some from time to time. "We're really seeing the world out-of-doors. Not that we don't live out-of-doors a great deal ourselves, but it is lovely to see how other creatures get along. "Why there is the monarch butterfly—that one on the milkweed plant with such fine chestnut brown wings and black touches to the edges, and a black body. He is a great traveler. He can fly all the way down south in the fall of the year and find his way back here in the summer again. "Lots of people used to doubt this until they realized it was true. And there's the tiger swallowtail with their look of a tiger about him—if you could ever say a tiger looked like a butterfly or a butterfly like a tiger. "I see what you mean," barked Rip, sniffing the air. "And he has swallowtails, too," said Willy Nilly. "Oh, I notice some of these are called touch-me-nots." "Then Christopher will want to touch that flower," cackled Top Notch. "The flowers were orange in color, jeweled with brownish red, on rather long stalks. "They're also called lady's earrings," laughed Willy Nilly.
