Sundown Stories

By Mary Graham Bonner

Willy Nilly Says
"Would you like me to leave now?" Willy Nilly asked, after he had admired the baby camel, and indeed he did think it was as interesting as a baby as he had ever seen.

"No," said Mother Camel, "I want him to get used to people. If he sees you and becomes used to you it will be easier when he sees others."

Willy Nilly did not know that he felt very much flattered by this, but he let the camel talk on.

"Later he will have many visitors who will come to see us when we're having our show."

So Willy Nilly stayed and as the camel moved a little to talk to Willy Nilly the baby moved, too. He looked at Willy Nilly and then he looked away and then he looked once more, and in between each look he gazed at his mother. She evidently thought it was all right and so he would not be frightened of this visitor who was not his familiar camel mother.

In fact in a little while the baby camel took a nap and softly Mother Camel answered Willy Nilly's questions about camel ways. "Where was your home?" he asked.

"Asia," said the camel. "That's because I'm the Bactrian camel—the one with two humps."

"I must remember that word," said Willy Nilly.

"The dromedary of Africa has only one hump and hasn't our long hair, and isn't so big anyway, and can travel more quickly than we can," the camel said as she moved her mouth from side to side.

"Do you want to know anything else?"

"Oh, yes," answered Willy Nilly.

Tomorrow—"Camel Chatter."
