Sundown Stories

By Mary Graham Bonner

Puddle Muddle Sundown They had gone a long distance by the time that Christopher had spotted the sun going down, and yet they had not known quite how far they had got along when suddenly Rip shouted in his barking, happy voice:

"I see Puddle Muddle!" Willy Nilly stopped the automobile Two-Ways and the Puddle Muddlers got out of it and also out of the trailer.

"We were nearer home than you thought, eh?" asked Willy Nilly. But the Puddle Muddlers were too happy to speak. They overlooked Puddle Muddle, and the red sun was casting a glow over their dear bumps and ruts, over Willy Nilly's Sweet Face's meadow, the bears' cave, the ducks' pond and—in the distance—the Quackery.

"We're tired," said Willy Nilly, "but we'll drive on through and then we can rest." They all agreed that this was a good idea.

In no time at all they were striking their own bumpy roads and were climbing the twisting, rough hill that led to Willy Nilly's.

The sun had gone down. Twilight had come to Puddle Muddle. The Puddle Muddlers stretched their wings, their legs and even bent down and patted their dear familiar earth.

"We're home," they said. "We've had a beautiful time, but now we're home," cried Christopher Columbus Crow. "Shall we unpack?" asked Mrs. Quacker.

Fires Spread, More Localities Are Threatened

Index Wash., Oct. 21 (AP)—Logging camps closed, others prepared for evacuation and several communities were endangered today by spreading forest fires which already have claimed one life and destroyed an estimated 3,500,000 feet of logs and down timber.

Fire fighters returning to Sultan after a night of battling fires along the Stevens pass highway estimated 2,300 acres already had been burned.

The fire was out of control in three sectors; flames leaped the north fork of the Cuyamoc river and started burning in the Salmon creek canyon; a fire along Salmon creek burned into new timber and a third blaze, which this forenoon was reported running over four miles long and a mile wide, was out of control.

Town officials at Gold Bar, however, said the situation appeared better than last night. The nearest flames were still two miles away. Two cabins were reported burned at Wallace lake, four miles from Gold Bar.

Several Uscutilla Logging company camps were endangered. One was ready for evacuation this morning.

A fire in the Mt. Stickney area destroyed an Edlund Logging company camp. The Miller Logging company here said a fire along Bear creek had destroyed three railroad bridges.

An estimated 200 men were fighting the fires. Carl Chaffee, 32, who saved himself from burning to death in a fire near Bear creek by burying himself in mud, said he was in the mud with his face down for five hours. His companion, William Ryan, 35, was burned to death.

"The wind changed while we were fighting the fire and before we knew it we were trapped. There were spots of fire on all sides of us. The wind was carrying embers through the air like balls of fire and new blazes broke out everywhere.

"We had been using a fire hose but the flames burned it in two, and that it all that saved me. Seepage on the nearby railroad bed offered some refuge from the terrific heat and we buried our faces in the mud.

"I beat out one fire on my legs, but several hit Bill. I guess he burned to death—I don't know just when. But it let up for a few minutes and he was dead then.

"In one of the hells I crawled to a small hole where water from the hose made a puddle. I managed to soak my clothes there, then crawled back beside Bill. Then the smoke grew thicker again. The last I saw of him, all of his jacket, a woolen longer type, and his shirt were burned off.

"But I envied Bill. I thought if it would only be all over, all at once, I would be better off," he said. Chaffee was rescued after five hours. His hands, face, neck and one leg was burned. Monroe hospital attaches said he would recover.
